A POSSIBLE COMPLICATION.

Russian Alarm About Polish Sympathy with France—The Baltic Provinces—A Dilemma.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PARIS, Aug. 23.—I saw a letter today from a person high in office at St. Petersburg, stating that the Russian Government is seriously alarmed at the state of affairs in Poland. There is a great agitation in favor of France, and numbers of Poles are leaving to offer their services in the French Army. On the other hand a movement is on foot in the Baltic provinces of the Russian Empire in favor of annexation to the German Confederation, and is gaining ground. The Russian Government is on the horns of a dilemma. It is believed that in self-defense Russia will be compelled to take part in the war.

R.

BAZAINE AND M'MAHON.

No Important Movement Since the 19th—Bazaine Resting—McMahon Marching—Prussians Incumbered with Their Wounded.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—The journal Le Public, says there has been no serious engagement since the 19th. At the Council of Ministers yesterday, Count de PALIKAO gave re-assuring details as to the position of Marshal BAZAINE, which he said was excellent. The Marshal informed Count PALIKAO that he should give his troops two days of needed rest, but that at the same time it was known to him that the Prussians were encumbered with their sick and wounded, and would be unable to take any advantage of his delay. Marshal MCMAHON is marching, adds Le Public, but we must say no more of him. It is understood that the Crown Prince of Prussia has stopped his forward march. It seems less likely now that Paris will be attacked. The last ten days have changed the attitude of France and altered the chances of the war.

Organization of a Large Army Under McMahon—Prussian Losses 120,000—McMahon at Chalons with 175,000 Men.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—A dispatch from Mézières, dated yesterday afternoon, contains the following: The resistance of Marshal BAZAINE, even with the small force under his command, prevented the advance of the Prussians until the organization and preparation of MCMAHON's large army was entirely completed. MCMAHON and BAZAINE are now ready to assume the offensive, and a movement is expected immediately. They will attack the Prussians together. The Liberté says the army of the Prince Royal, which reached St. Dizier some days ago, has not passed that place, but, on the contrary, has fallen back. The same journal adds, that it knows from a reliable source, that the loss of the three Prussian Armies has thus far been as follows: Killed, 35,000; wounded, 85,000.

LONDON, Aug. 24—Noon.—The following dispatch from Paris, contains intelligence from the seat of war: "Metz is entirely isolated. The Prussians are strong on the west in that vicinity. Gen. FAILLY, who was in command at Chalons, is still there, but by the new disposition is superseded. Gen. MCMAHON is strongly posted in the plains before Chalons, with heavy detachments at St. Menehould, Verdun and Rheims. MCMAHON has 175,000 men under his command, well supplied with food, ammunition and artillery. The sharpshooters are hastening to Chalons.

Another Paris special says: La Patrie reiterates my special of yesterday that MCMAHON's forces are with or near BAZAINE in the Ardennes Mountains. But another authority reports that it is only "the Army of Chalons"—the regularly located army there—that has joined BAZAINE, and that the latter still keeps all his lines intact.

Telegraphic Communication with Aube and Cote d'Or—Favorable Advices from the French Armies.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—Telegraphic communication with all points in the Departments of Aube and Côte d'Or is cut off. The Minister of the Interior authorizes the statement to be made that additional advices of a favorable character have been received from the armies in the field; but the information is purposely withheld from the public, as some journals indiscreetly give details which should be kept back. The Constitutionnel, in an editorial, showing the improvement in the military situation, says it is reported that there was another engagement on Sunday, the 22d, which resulted favorably to the French. It gives no further particulars.

STUTTGARDT, Aug. 24.—The capitulation of Pfalsburg, which was reported yesterday, has not yet been officially confirmed.

CARLSRUHE, Aug. 24.—There is much indignation expressed at the action of the French garrison of Strasbourg in firing upon Kehl, a defenseless town. The commander at Kehl has solemnly protested against it.

Bazaine's Position—French Lack of Arms—A Basis for Peace Negotiations—Victor Hugo.

In Mr. GAILLARDET's dispatch to the Journal des Etats Unis he speaks of having seen a dispatch from Marshal BAZAINE, and says:

"Though expressed in general terms it is quite reassuring. It comes certainly neither from a vanquished man, or one who has doubt of success. BAZAINE has desired to leave Metz. He has not succeeded. The enemy, in retaliation, have desired to surround and cut his communications with Paris and Chalons. They have not succeeded any better. Such, in two words, is the situation, and the explanation of the late battles. Our losses are grievous, he says, but those of the enemy are enormous, and, out of all proportion to the negative result they have obtained. Send on reinforcements. This they do without stripping the capital. Each day 15,000 to 20,000 conscripts depart for Champagne. This morning two battalions of Bretons and Normans left on the railroad to Ardennes. I ought to say that their armament was very defective. They had the old musket and no uniforms, but they are brave and strong fellows." He says further: "There is no abatement of patriotism. Pending the work on the fortifications, the national guard, and even children of the schools and the lyceums, are exercised in the manual of arms. There is nothing grand or serious in the Corps Legislatif. I saw the Minister of Marine at the opening of the session. He was as mute as the rest, but left it to be understood that he expected good news from the fleet. It is time. Prussian spies abound; above all in the semi-official world. There is redoubled diligence in supervising the dispatches sent off by way of England, Belgium and Switzerland. A permit signed by M. CHEVREAU is necessary to address a political dispatch to the United States. Some correspondents telegraph from the Belgium frontier the news they receive by rail in the Paris journals. It is difficult to know precisely what passes at Chalons and in its vicinity. At the Ministry they peremptorily refuse to communicate anything on that subject. * * * * At the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, all is tranquil. Some conferences have taken place between certain diplomats, but there has been no question of any preliminaries of peace, as the English journals report. This I know, that M. BISMARCK has indirectly informed M. DE LA TOUR D'AUVERGNE that Prussia will only treat on a basis that will prevent France from, in future, taking revenge. It is not of our humiliation, but of our destruction that BISMARCK has dreamed. France will answer him. Good news! VICTOR HUGO returns to us. The poet re-enters France in the uniform of an inactive National Guard."

NEUTRALITY.

Prussian Trespass on the Belgian Frontier—French and Belgian Accounts of the Matter.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—A dispatch from Arlon, a frontier town of Belgium, sixteen miles from Luxembourg, says violations Belgian territory by the Prussians are of frequent occurrence. It is reported that the Prussians attack Belgian soldiers, enter Belgium and Luxembourg with provisions for their army, and transport their wounded through sections of neutral territory. These acts lead to the fear that the position of Belgium as a neutral Power may be seriously compromised.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—A Charleroi (Belgium) journal explains that the Prussians near the frontier fired on some Belgian troops, mistaking them for French soldiers. It also states that a Prussian detachment undoubtedly trespassed unawares on Belgian soil, but they left on receiving warning.

Transportation of the Prussian Wounded Home Through Neutral Territory.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—The question of the transportation home of the Prussian wounded through the neutral States of Holland, Belgium and Luxembourg has assumed some importance. It was stated at first that the neutral Great Powers had asked this privilege of the Governments of Holland and Belgium, but it seems now the request originated with Prussia herself. Holland has refused, and Belgium has replied that such consent on her part would undoubtedly be construed by France as equivalent to an act of hostility. The Paris journals are unanimously opposed to the project. They take the grounds that the Prussians once using neutral territory for a humane purpose would soon learn to bring forward through the same avenue provisions, munitions of war and reinforcements.

THE PROSPECTS OF PEACE.

Prussian Expectations of a Revolution in Paris to End in Peace—Russia on Dismemberment—Ultimatum of France, the Expulsion of the Invaders.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—A special Paris dispatch says: "At the Foreign Office everything remains quiet. There have been several informal conferences among the different diplomatic agents, but there was no mention of any peace overtures such as the English papers report. All that is known here is that Count VON BISMARCK has indirectly sent information to LA TOUR D'AUVERGNE, stating that Prussia would only conclude peace upon a basis which will make it impossible for France to think of future ravages." Private advices from Paris, received by mail, contain the following intelligence, dated Monday, 22d: "A Chalons correspondent says the Crown Prince of Prussia is near St. Dizier, and going toward Paris with 150,000 men. It is uncertain whether they will be able to avoid a fight before going further. The Prussian officers do not believe that Paris will resist. They expect an insurrection will follow on the approach of the Prussian Army, which will result in the displacement of the present French authorities, when a peace may be easily guaranteed. They say the war will be purposeless if these points cannot be effected."

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 24.—The St. Petersburg Journal denies that Russia is committed to prevent the dismemberment of France, as has lately been published. She is, however, certainly unfavorable to that measure, but regards the agitation of that question as premature.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—The Presse says the ambassadors from Russia, Italy and Austria, in reply to their offers to negotiate for a peace, have been officially informed that peace is impossible so long as a single Prussian soldier treads French soil.

The Conferences at the Foreign Office—The Prussian Liberals Demand a Hearing.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—The Minister of Foreign Affairs holds interviews daily with the Ambassadors of Austria and Italy. So frequent are these conferences, they have become the subject of remark in the journals, and lead to much speculation.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—A special dispatch, received in this city today from Berlin, says a great popular movement is on foot to secure for the Liberal Party an influential voice in the settlement of terms of peace, and to convene the German Parliament, to give expression to the feeling of the people, to whose energy and patriotism everything is due.

PARIS.

What the Prussians Will Have to Encounter—Incorporation of the National Guard with the Regular Army—The Loan—A Sharp Look-Out for Spies.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—The Constitutionnel, semi-officially, says: "Without entering into details, we may affirm that the work on the fortifications of the capital is progressing with wonderful rapidity, and the élan of the population is immense. The Prussian papers represent that Paris is not the Paris of the period between 1792 to 1815. They will discover their mistake. The capital proves now as ever that she is the heart of France. She is ready to receive the enemy. Neither spies nor battalions can break down the wall of defense which her danger has cemented. Should the Prussians advance to the ramparts of Paris they will find this out." The process of incorporating the National Guard with the regular army has commenced. The Journal Officiel says the amount of National Loan taken yesterday, as far as heard from, was 620,000,000 francs, and when the lists closed last night at least 5,000 persons waiting to subscribe were sent away. The returns from Marseilles, Bordeaux and several other large cities had not been received. The lists were reopened this morning, and large crowds are pressing to subscribe. The loan is quoted in open market at 80 francs 80 centimes, the same figure as rentes. The battalion of sharpshooters passing through Paris, last night, created great enthusiasm among the spectators. The moral tone of the city has vastly improved. There is less singing and shouting and more volunteering. All the citizens are providing themselves with arms. The wounded who return from the field receive ovations and are treated with every attention. It is rumored that a well-known lady of high social position here, has been arrested on a charge of conveying information to the enemy, and is now imprisoned in the fortress of Vincennes. An English surgeon was taken to a guard-house yesterday, on suspicion of being a spy, but on examination it turned out that he was attached to the field-hospital service, and he was released. A large number of farmers are bringing their grain to the Government storehouses.

A Novel Mode of Defense—Armies Between the Prussians and Paris—The Villette Disturbances.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—The proposition made by the Paris Figaro for placing electric lights on the Paris fortifications seems to meet with favor. Military authorities think the idea is a good one, as the dazzling light will perplex the besiegers and aid the besieged.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—The Patrie, of to-day, says: "Should the Prussians defeat the great army now confronting them near Chalons, they will have to vanquish another before reaching Paris. Besides they will find Paris itself amply prepared to resist any attack. The Garde Mobile and the sharpshooters camped around Paris are constantly drilled and exercised by competent officers." Three persons accused of complicity in the recent disorders at Villette, were tried before the Council of War today, found guilty and sentenced to death....The arrest of Prussian spies continues.

The Constitutionnel on the London Times—Red Tape in the French Service.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—The Constitutionnel, answering the assertions of the London Times that the French are in a desperate condition, shows that that journal arrives at its conclusions without waiting for complete or authentic reports of recent events, and defies it to decide who now is in the best military position, BAZAINE or King WILLIAM. It adds that the hostility of the Times is accounted for by the fact that the son of one of its proprietors married the daughter of the Prussian Ambassador at London, and some persons say that in addition to this the journal has been heavily subsidized by BISMARCK.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—Letters from Paris represent that bureaucracy and red tape interfere sadly with every arm of the French service.

CORPS LEGISLATIF.

A Tumultuous Session on Monday Night—Propositions of Defense—Accusations Against the Majority—The Session Closed in Noise and Confusion.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—The session of the Corps Legislatif held last evening was unusually turbulent. In reply to a question, Minister DUVERNOIS gave assurance that there was an ample store of provisions in Paris. Several other interpellations were made by various members. Notwithstanding answers were returned which could not be otherwise than satisfactory, yet there was much excitement manifested. JULES SIMON proposed to send out of the city immediately all those who could not bear arms for France. The proposition was greeted with great applause. GLAIS BIZOIN suggested the sending away of all the wounded. JULES SIMON energetically protested against this. Deputy TACHARD created a tumult by saying that there was a scarcity of arms for the troops in certain quarters. The majority protested. Minister BRAME said that arms would be duly distributed. He called the attention of the Deputies to the fact that questions concerning the armament should not be discussed too much. Deputy GAMBETTA, who was much excited, accused the majority of having brought on the war. His remarks were so harsh that the majority refused to listen to him. His voice was drowned by the uproar, and the session ended tumultuously. GAMBETTA is generally blamed for his lack of discretion. The Press of the city generally condemn the conduct of the Deputies of the Left, and M. GAMBETTA's attack is denounced as ill-timed.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Martello Towers in England to be Repaired—Prussian Governor of Alsace Appointed—The French in the Baltic.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—A Board of Engineers has been appointed to inspect and repair martello towers on the British coast.... Count RENARD, a noted writer on political economy and finances, has been appointed Prussian Governor of Alsace.... The Orleans Party are very hopeful. The Princes here watch events closely, and an agent of great skill and experience who is in Paris, advises them of every event affecting their interests there....Prussia has sent Bavaria ten millions in gold as a subsidy....The losses of the Saxon troops in the battle of the 18th, were 74 killed and nearly 2,000 wounded, of whom 175 have since died. SWINEMUND, Aug. 24.—It is said that the French squadron in the Baltic has in its service an experienced English Captain and a Danish skipper. The French have also secured pilots by the promise of splendid rewards.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—It is reported that a Prussian spy near Rheims, mistaking a general officer for Marshal MCMAHON, fired twice at him. He missed his aim, but hit and dangerously wounded a soldier standing by the side of the officer. The spy was instantly secured.

Aid From the United States for the Wounded of Both Armies.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 23.—An enthusiastic meeting of Frenchmen was held here to-day. Five thousand dollars were subscribed for the sufferers in the war. An effort will be made to remit to Paris $10,000 monthly. Intense excitement was manifested, and there was great cheering.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., Aug. 23.—A monster concert was held at the Opera-house last night for the benefit of the German Relief Fund.

What are the Probabilities of Bazaine's Escape?

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In the TIMES of today, Aug. 23, your Paris correspondent of Aug. 22 says:

"By the latest accounts BAZAINE was reported at Spincourt, near Montmédy, a town on the river Chiers, a tributary of the Meuse, twenty-five miles north of Verdun, and fifty miles north-east of Metz. It was presumed that his intention was to cross the Argonnes by Stenay to Vouziers, and thence strike down the Valley of the Aisne to St. Menehould, where half-way between Verdun and Chalons, a junction could readily be effected with MCMAHON. St. Menehould is thirty miles north of Vitry-le-Francois, and twenty-five miles north-east of Chalons. The three places form a triangle of which Chalons is the apex."

BAZAINE having made his escape from Metz by the Thionville gate, on the road to Thionville, between the Hill of St. Quentin and Moulins-les-Metz, this last name in the dispatch is evidently a misprint. Now let me say that there must be some mistake here. There are two roads leading north from Metz—the main one on the west bank of the Moselle, which leaves Metz by the gate of Thionville, and which passes through the demilune of the north-west front of the Double Crown of the Moselle, and which is about two miles and a half north of Moulins-les-Metz, this last place being about the same distance south of the Hill of St Quentin and the fortifications on it. The other road is on the east side of the Moselle, running through St. Julien-les-Metz, and less direct than the first.

Now, it is quite probable, with the possibility of an escape before him, that Marshal BAZAINE may have divided his forces, and, leaving his impedimenta in Metz, have moved off rapidly on these two roads to Thionville. But if he effected this without the knowledge of the Prussians, their outpost service must be in a very lax state.

But granting him to have done this, how is he to gain St. Menehould, on the Aisne, by the way of Montmédy and Vousiers, before the Prussians, discovering his escape, can get there? Now, with an ordinary good war map and a pair of dividers in hand, any one can see that the distance he has to march over is at least 130 miles, measured by straight line stages along his line of march, while the Prussians are only about fifty-five from the same place, reckoning from Metz. If he has escaped at all, he will, in all probability, strike for some point in the basin of Paris lower down, on the Marne.

In another column of the Times we are told, on the authority of the War Minister, that the Prussian pickets have appeared at St. Dizier, about twenty miles south-east of Vitry-le-François, on the Marne. Now this is the point where NAPOLEON I. struck his first blow against BLUCHER in his immortal campaign in 1814. The basin of Paris, watered by the Seine, the Marne, &c., all converging on Paris, is likely to be again the scene of similar strategical combinations to those of 1814. Advancing along the roads between these two rivers, which are at no place more than forty miles apart, with their main body, and resting their wings, strongly reinforced, on these two rivers, the Prussians, having the superiority of numbers, may safely attempt the same strategical game, offensively, as NAPOLEON I. did in his defensive-offensive plan, wherein he struck at BLUCHER and SCHWARTZENBERG alternately, forcing them to fall back, but not powerful enough to hold them long in check. The next few days to come must open up this scene, or find the Prussians pushed over the Moselle again.

M.

WEST POINT, Tuesday, Aug. 23, 1870.

[Our correspondent will observe from this morning's telegrams that the reported movement of BAZAINE, of which our representative in Paris obtained the earliest intelligence, has been again asserted on the very respectable authority of the Patrie. The obscurity in which the relative positions of the two armies is at present involved is as complete as the entire absence of any official information can make it. It is scarcely necessary, however, to remind one so competent to judge on the subject as our correspondent, that the position to the west of Metz which the Prussians gained by four days' severe fighting, had a certain relation to the strength of the fortress as well as to the army sheltered behind it. It is not pretended that the withdrawal of a large portion of BAZAINE's command could have been unknown to the enemy, but as a portion equally large was presumedly left behind, it is probable that a complete investment of the fortress would be considered a more desirable movement than weakening their already shattered corps by advancing toward St. Menehould. Such an advance must have been made by the road which passes Verdun; and in the event of avoiding that fortress, the passage across the Ardennes might have placed even a very powerful force in some danger from the foes it would then have both in front and rear. There is the additional fact in favor of BAZAINE's ability to reach Montmédy in safety, that to the west of Thionville, at least, and probably to the south of it also, the great frontier railway was held by the French. It was intimated two days ago that the fortress had received supplies from Mézières by this road. We quite agree with our correspondent as to the important operations which may be expected in the line of the river system of Champagne.]

THE CAUSES OF THE WAR.

A German Appeal for American Sympathy—The Napoleonic Dynasty Arraigned—What the Germans are Fighting For.

The following is the address to the people of the United States issued by the Convention of delegates representing the German Patriotic Aid Societies of the Union:

FELLOW-CITIZENS: When LOUIS BONAPARTE strangled the French Republic, he found it necessary to call upon the people for the ratification of his coup d'état. The President became Emperor "through the mercy of Divine Providence and the will of the people of France." "Divine Providence," he asserted, approved his perjury, and the French nation desired that henceforth the will of the perjurer should be the will of France. Thus the second Empire began with a shameless lie, and thereby proved itself at once the legitimate successor of the first, for the entire history of the Napoleonic race is a continual proof that the Napoleonic system is but an immeasurable lie. The first NAPOLEON proclaimed himself the banner-bearer of the French Republic, which pretended to draw the sword but in its own defense. NAPOLEON III. says: "The Empire is peace." During the reign of NAPOLEON I., as well as that of NAPOLEON III., the history of France, however, is an uninterrupted array of aggressive wars. With soldiers they erected the throne, and bayonets have ever been their sole foundation. The Empire is war—military glory is the only basis upon which the Napoleonic dynasty can rest. Only while France dictates her decrees to other nations can she forget the disgrace that upon her own soil she knows of nought but servile submission. The first and the third NAPOLEON have both frankly confessed that only a disunited and helpless Germany would enable them to dictate laws to Europe. Once already, history has proven the truth of this assertion, and the attempt is now being made to repeat the evidence. The world-wide power of NAPOLEON I. succumbed when the German people arose, and against the tottering throne of NAPOLEON III. united Germany now stands arrayed under a strong and popular leader. The final result cannot be doubtful. NAPOLEON himself has proclaimed: "A great people, battling for a just cause, cannot be conquered." France, however, is torn within itself; it is the Emperor who goes to battle, and his cause is accursed, for he wages a most groundless and aggressive war simply and solely for the purpose of patching up his crumbling throne for his son with the blood of the German nation. Upon the German side alone battles a people—a people united and determined—and its cause is just, for it defends its honor and its soil. In this war the King of Prussia is merely the leader, the unanimously recognized leader of the nation. Ever since NAPOLEON's declaration of war, united Germany sprung into life, recognizing but one party in this cause, "the German party." Whatever reckonings individuals or parties may have scored up as between themselves or against their rulers, the settlement has been postponed until the grand purpose is accomplished to prevent the grasping hands of the Emperor of France from seizing the reins of Europe. The first requisite for a people is independent thought and action; through these attributes alone can liberty be achieved. Freedom must be conquered; it cannot be bestowed as a gift, least of all by a foreign despot. The sympathies of all Germans, even those of the Republicans and of the martyrs of the Revolution of 1848, cluster around the national army, led by the mightiest of German Princes, simply because every German is conscious of the fact that the most sacred privilege of the people, its complete independence of foreign potentates, can only be protected under the leadership of the King of Prussia. But, though the nation now stands in need of the King, this war on the part of Germany is not a dynastic struggle, but, in the fullest sense of the term, the war of the people. The King, as well as the people, have recognised the truth, and, therefore, stand together firm and inseparable.

Thus, NAPOLEON III. has completed what NAPOLEON I. began. His lust for conquest has, contrary to his wishes, united a dismembered Germany. Germany, once united of its own free will, means Germany united forever, and a united Germany is the safest guarantee for the peace of Europe. Like a broad rampart, it will stand between the States whose ambition is most to be feared, too strong to be attacked, the character of its people being a sufficient guarantee that the rights of neighboring States will be respected. German Princes, like those of other countries, have at times pursued a policy of conquest; the German people, however, has always been content to dwell in peace upon its own soil, and in a united Germany the will of the people alone will direct public affairs. Disunion alone made it possible for German rulers to place their own will above that of the people, and the jealousy of the different States was the fire in which the Princes forged the chains for the people. The history of the year 1866 is a conclusive proof of the truth of this assertion. The first step of the victorious King of Prussia, after the conclusion of peace, was his request made at the bar of the people's representatives, praying for indemnity against the consequences of all acts committed by him in violation of the constitution. In the Prussia of 1866, he boldly made his will the only law; to that Prussia, however, whose history dates from the victories of 1866, he admitted that even the King was subject to the laws. If one-half of Germany had the power to wrest this admission from the victor of Sadowa, no future ruler will dare to oppose the demands of a united Germany. From whatever standpoint, therefore, we may view the Franco-German war, if not prejudice, selfishness or jealousy darken the judgment, we must ardently desire that victory shall alight upon the German arms.

Though the people of France have now assumed the war of the Emperor as their own, this fact does not change the situation. France is responsible for the acts of NAPOLEON, because, for the last twenty years, she has executed his decrees and sanctioned his policy. It is just, therefore, that she should bear the consequences, and that the civilized world should deny her that sympathy which it accords in full, unstinted measure to a united, progressive Germany. And the American people, more than any other, has weighty reasons for extending this sympathy.

The United States first proclaimed the two principles, that the source of sovereignty is not in the princes, but in the people, and that no nation has the right to interfere with the internal affairs of another. These two principles are the foundation of modern politics, and Germany defends them in this war. NAPOLEON has presumed to dictate to Spain to whom she shall offer her crown, and to the King of Prussia whom he shall forbid to accept it. With the same right he commanded the Mexicans to accept a ruler chosen by himself. In Mexico the United States put in their veto, because they would not tolerate a violent infringement of these two principles upon the American Continent. Can they now, without being inconsistent and false to their principles, sanction NAPOLEON's demands regarding the Spanish question? But the question of the Spanish crown was only an empty pretext for the war. The real cause lies in the results of the battle of Sadowa. France was no longer the first Power in Europe, and NAPOLEON feared the increasing power of Prussia. His fears were well founded, for the subsequent conduct of the Southern Germans has shown that, to them, the transformation of Prussia into Germany is not the most terrible of terrors. But we ask: Is Germany to remain weak and dismembered merely because NAPOLEON can retain the ermine of empire only while France remains the mightiest State of Europe? In the light of late events it seems probable that the main cause of NAPOLEON's sympathy with the American rebellion is to be traced in the shadow which the gigantic growth of this Republic threw upon the Empire of France. The phantom of "European balance of power" does not change the situation. As no individual or nation would have the right to interfere in case the United States should develop a power superior to that of all Europe combined, so should Germany not be molested if it becomes the mightiest State of Europe, provided, always, it does not attempt to extend its power at the expense of other nationalities. Princes invented the system of balancing the European Powers to benefit their dynastic interests, and the intricate scales require almost daily correction. The people can thrive without this artificial contrivance; their interest requires merely an uninterrupted, unarmed peace. The Napoleonic system of an armed peace alone renders it necessary to forcibly subjugate a nation because another nation is unable to keep pace with its progress. It may benefit Kings to weaken neighboring States, but nations are benefited in the same ratio, in which the world generally progresses and develops. As history is transformed from a history of Kings into a history of nations, and from a history of nations into a history of the world, the maxim of the balance of States will more and more become an empty phrase. Whoever seeks to strengthen and revise this maxim by the brutal power of the sword is an enemy of mankind, and the gratitude of the world is due to him who renders this enemy harmless. The Napoleonic Caesars must maintain this balance of power—as they understand it—at any and every cost, even if its maintenance should necessitate an universal war each and every year, for their throne totters and falls unless the Empire of France makes all other nations kick the beam. The United States have done more than any other people of the earth to smooth the path for true cosmopolitan ideas; how, then, can they extend their sympathies to those whose whole political system strives to preserve the barbarous ideas of the middle ages, inimical alike to liberty and justice?

Thus Germany battles for the identical principles which form the basis of American institutions. Not one circumstance exists on account of which America should now desert these principles, while the most weighty reasons bespeak her unstinted and energetic sympathy, so far as the same can be extended without infringement of the Neutrality laws. Some American newspapers hesitate not to cite the ghosts of those Hessians who, during the war of Independence, fought on the side of England, in order to prejudice the people against Germany. Are they not aware, or do they not wish to remember, that these unfortunate men were led to slaughter like cattle, and that not only the best men of Germany, but the whole people, cursed and condemned the infamous crime? Is it just to burden the German people of to-day with the felonies of German Princes committed a hundred years ago? And, in comparison with these Hessians, these papers mention the names of LAFAYETTE and LOUIS XVI. in proof of the debt of "gratitude" which America owes to France, but they are silent as to all those German-Americans who, to the last moment, fought side by side with the native-born Americans; silent as to STEUBEN and DE KALB, silent as to FREDERICK the Great, the first, the truest, the most unselfish friend of the young Republic. They glorify the momentary connection of the jealous cousins, caused by political motives, and ignore the friendship of the brothers, though it has lasted for a hundred years. The German people have never forgotten that the Anglo-Saxon and the German are the strong twin brothers, upon whose broad shoulders rests the future of the world. But why descend to mouldering graves when the terribly grand yesterday stands before our eyes? Who grieved and who rejoiced with the Republic while she was battling for her life? And who intrigued and manipulated with busy brain and hand to bring about her downfall? From the day of Bull Run to the day of Appomattox, we, the German-Americans fought and bled, and conquered by your side. We do not claim your gratitude, because we simply performed our duty. But we expect that you will now sympathize with us, as every fibre of our hearts sympathized with you when the existence of this Union was at stake. And it is our personal cause, indeed, for which they are now bleeding in Europe. Those German braves are blood of our blood, and that blood flows to save the graves of our fathers from desecration, and that our brethren may be blessed with freedom and independence. Or do you believe, that we could look forward to the results of this war with indifference, because we are in safety as citizens of this Republic? Woe to this land if we could be so base, for whoever can stifle the love for his native land, can never love the land of his adoption.

And even if we, as German-Americans, have no claim on your gratitude, can you forget the people that during your darkest hour never ceased to assist and encourage you? NAPOLEON interdicted the quotation of American bonds on the Bourse of Paris during the rebellion; in Germany the mechanic and laborer gathered together the scanty savings of a lifetime for investment in American securities, for he always cherished the faith that, in the end, justice and liberty would triumph. If there are those who are still unconvinced, perhaps their own interest may induce them to grant their sympathy to the German cause. The agricultural and commercial interests of the United States demand a speedy and complete success of the German arms. Germany has sent us, until now, about 100,000 emigrants per year. This immigration, which was principally instrumental in transforming the wilds of the West into blooming landscapes, ceases entirely during the war. What an immense capital in money and labor is withheld from the United States simply because NAPOLEON saw fit to interrupt the natural progress of events. And only if Germany is victorious, will this capital again direct its steady flow to this Republic. If she is conquered and beaten in this struggle, then for many, many years but a meagre stream of German money and of German labor will tend toward these shores.

Thus the identity of political principles, consanguinity, and the friendship of a hundred years, and, at last, commercial and agricultural interests, naturally engage the sympathies of the American people in favor of the German cause. We do not expect or desire that you should meddle in the strife. We would be the first to counsel strict neutrality, and, in the mode and manner of assistance which we ourselves render to our brethren, we will, in the future, as we have in the past, circumscribe our action strictly by the laws of the country. But as we can demonstrate our active sympathy without violating the neutrality laws, so may the native-born American. The BONAPARTES will ever ignominiously perish because in all their calculations they disregard the mighty influence of moral ideas. These moral ideas and not the needle-gun will decide the struggle. If the moral sentiment of the world, therefore, will proclaim its preference for the German cause, the conviction that they are battling for the cause of the world will make the German patriots invincible. If the decision of America is emphatically in favor of the German cause, then the decision of history is settled in advance. But if you believe that our brothers are bleeding for your cause as well as for their own, then, we implore you, let your acts demonstrate your conviction. Do not now close your hand, which heretofore has always been generously open wherever suffering was to be appeased or tears to be dried. You yourself have experienced with what different emotions the soldier faces the enemy's fire when he knows that the sufferer in the hospital and the widows and orphans at home will meet with kind hearts and compassionate hands. The consciousness to have joined hands with us in assisting bleeding Germany will ever be a blessing to you, and it is in the nature of things that the moral and material assistance which America extends to Germany will be returned a thousand fold, for this war can only terminate with the complete annihilation of all "Napoleonic ideas," and with the permanent creation of a united Germany, a result which, for years and scores of years, will secure the peace of Europe.

THE PRESIDENT AT NEWPORT.

Visit to the Yacht Cambria—Reception by Mr. Ashbury—Other Incidents.

NEWPORT, Aug. 24.—Newport, which has been roused to temporary animation by the presence of the New-York yacht squadron, is, since the departure, this morning, of nearly all the yachts, enjoying an additional excitement in the presence of President GRANT. The President passed the night at the residence of L. P. MORTON. Multitudes of carriages called this morning, and there has been an unceasing current all day of cards and invitations. About noon the President, accompanied by Mrs. GRANT, Mr. and Mrs. MORTON and Gen. PORTER, visited Fort Adams, Col. DUPONT commandant. A salute was fired in honor of the President's arrival, after which he reviewed the troops of the fortress. The most pleasing, as well as the most interesting event of the day, was a visit made by the President on board the yacht Cambria, Mrs. GRANT and the ladies and gentlemen named above, also accompanying him. The President was received with all due honors. The President and party were received in the Cambria's gig, and after coming on board were introduced to Mr. ASHBURY, who in fitting terms expressed to the President his appreciation of the compliment tendered him, and having introduced Messrs. COOK and KEMP, his compagnons du voyage in the late ocean yacht race, showed the party over the vessel. It is unnecessary to say that the President was most highly pleased with the thorough appointments. The yacht was profusely decorated with flags, and as the party stepped on board, the American flag, which, till then, had been kept hidden and invisible, now suddenly unfurled directly over the President's head.

A dejeuner completed this agreeable visit. It was the President's intention to visit the Dauntless also, but the latter yacht had gone up Narraganset Bay with a pleasure party.

This evening Mr. MORTON gave a dinner party in honor of President and Mrs. GRANT. Most of the leading notables in Newport received invitations. Late in the evening the military band from Fort Adams serenaded the President, which closed the day's tribute paid him.

Further Details of the Fire in the Brooklyn Navy-Yard.

The fire in the Brooklyn Navy-yard, Tuesday night, broke out at 8¼ o'clock in the fourth or upper story of the machine-shop. The building is of granite, with iron window-frames and iron sashes, iron beams, and an iron-framed copper roof. The floors and casing on the inside of the roof are of wood. The floor upon which the fire occurred was used for the storage of patterns, or wooden models of machinery. At one end is a small paint-shop, where the fire is supposed to have originated. No open lights, matches, or smoking are allowed in the building, and the flames are supposed to have originated in the spontaneous combustion of oiled cotton waste in the paint-shop, which the heat of the place might have ignited. It was extinguished by 9 o'clock, and was entirely confined to the fourth floor. The wooden casing of the roof was injured, and a number of old patterns, made for the machinery of vessels, now out of use, were burned. The whole damage is estimated at less than $5,000, instead of $100,000, as at first reported. The two steam fire-engines, the seven hose-carriages, and the two hook and ladder trucks of the yard, were brought into requisition, under the superintendence of THOMAS C. BAKER, Chief Engineer of the Fire Department of the Yard, and, after the flames were under control, engines Nos. 4 and 8 of the Brooklyn Fire Department, arrived. An accident occurred to No. 8 and it could not be worked. The Brooklyn Fire Marshal complimented Mr. BAKER on his management of the fire.

Meeting of the Germans of the Twenty-second Ward—A New Political Organization.

The Germans of the Twenty-second Ward assembled last evening at No. 667 Eighth-avenue, for the purpose of organizing a new political party, under the name of the Independent German Association of the Twenty-second Ward. Col. WUTSCHEL was made President, and WM. LOHN Secretary. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The existing political parties have not as yet succeeded in securing the German vote of this City, we deem it necessary for the proper protection of our interests, and as an influence against political corruption, that an organization be formed among us; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the German citizens of this district, form ourselves in such an organization, and elect as regular officers a President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer.

Resolved, That we advise the organization, by Germans, of similar societies throughout the City.

A Finance Committee, consisting of Messrs. DHONE, MARX, BENSBERG, SCHIEFFELE and MACK, was appointed. Messrs. WUTSCHEL, TUILP, KUNISHARE, DOHLGER, HILFERS, SCHIEFFELE and LOEW were announced as a Committee to make arrangements for a mass-meeting, which will be called by the Association in a few days. Seventy names have already been enrolled as members of the organization. The Association will meet on every Wednesday evening during the present European war.

Accident on the Morris and Essex Railroad.

The Hackettstown mail train on the Morris and Essex Railroad yesterday afternoon ran off the track near Roseville Station, in Newark, completely smashing the engine, a new one, which has been on the road but ten days. The baggage car was badly broken, and the wreck scattered along the track for some distance. Fortunately no passengers were killed though some were injured, and all badly frightened. The cause of the accident was the misplacement of a switch by a careless switch tender, who has since not been seen. Up to 10½ P. M. last evening, the track had not been cleared, and all the trains from Bloomfield and neighboring stations, after 4 P. M., have not been able to pass.

Personal.

The venerable Prof. GUNNING S. BEDFORD, who was taken suddenly ill about two weeks ago, still continues in a very precarious condition. Although seemingly more cheerful last evening, he was nevertheless still unable to partake of more than the most trifling amount of nourishment, and his condition continues to be a matter of grave and painful solicitude to his family and numerous friends.

Riot at Fall River—The Fire-Engines Play Upon the Crowd.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Aug. 24.—A serious riot occurred last evening in Fall River, where the spinners are on a strike. A crowd of about 1,000 assembled near Durfee Mill to assault the workmen as they came out, as was done the previous evening. The Police could not disperse the mob. One or two officers were knocked senseless with stones. The Fire Department was called, and played water upon the crowd.

WAR LETTERS.

THE CONTENDING ARMIES.

Review of Their Operations by an Ex-Officer of the Army of the Potomac—German and French Generalship Compared—The Battles of Saarbruck, Wissembourg and Woerth—The New Commander-in-Chief, Bazaine, and His Generals.

From Our Special Correspondent.

NANCY, Tuesday, Aug. 9, 1870.

"Would that night or BLUCHER would come, exclaimed WELLINGTON at Waterloo. Said the Emperor NAPOLEON, yesterday: "Give me eight days more without a battle, and I will face the German Army with 450,000 troops in line." Will Germany give France eight days of grace? I doubt it. Every day, however, the forces come crowding to the frontier. It is a curious thing to watch them, to compare the faces of the troops as I saw them ten days ago, and as I see them today. Then they were bent on a fun-loving excursion, a "devil-may-care" look was the characteristic of both private and officer. "To the Rhine!" was the echo along the lines, and it came with a careless good-humor, as if the shadow alone of a French Army was enough to make Berlin shudder. Now the tune is a different one. Now the look is sullen; the "Marseillaise" has a ring of cold steel to it, and represents rather the exasperation than the joy of France.

THE FEELING IN THE ARMY.

I may say that the pulse of the army throbs with the heart of France. It is a curious thing to watch the electric effect of army sympathy in unison with national feeling along the lines here. You scarcely find it in other countries. I never saw it in our own armies in the United States, nor yet in other countries where I have served. The great blow struck by the Crown Prince has brought the French Army to its senses, and in a military point of view is a valuable lesson to the country. The next struggle at arms will probably be the fiercest ever fought in Europe, and in view of this it may be desirable to give a few details and observations relative to the strategic positions of the forces facing each other, and to take some notice of the events which have followed in such rapid succession during the past week.

PLAN OF THE CAMPAIGN.

As to the campaign planned by the French Generals, a modification of that bequeathed by the late Minister of War, Gen. NIEL, little need be said. There are certainly no extensive lines offering an opportunity for a variety of plans. Nature herself, and the neutral frontiers of neighboring nations force both combatants to a more or less direct line of action. This, however, is more applicable to France than to Germany. It is evident that a campaign to the eastward of Strasbourg, across the Rhine, would have but little effect upon the power of United Germany, even were it possible to succeed in the occupation of the Grand Duchies of Baden and Wurtemberg and the Kingdom of Bavaria. The German power can alone be said to be broken in this contest when France holds possession of the great trunk line of railway extending from the Rhine, through Berlin, to the port of Stettin, on the Baltic. The hard work of the last week is the best answer to the question of how many campaigns has France to undertake before she accomplishes such a gigantic enterprise? There is no doubt that the French plan of campaign was to enter Germany in a direct line.

THE FIGHT AT SAARBRUCK.

Despite the observations of the English journals that the action at Saarbrück was "to give the French people something to tickle them while plans were perfecting," it was really an advance incident to the objects of the French plan of invasion, for Saarbrück is a central railroad point absolutely necessary to occupy for any direct invasion of the German territory. Rhenish Bavaria and Rhenish Prussia have a frontier of about one hundred miles bordering on France. It extends from the western banks of the Rhine to Sierck, on the border of Luxembourg, where are found the fortified lines thrown up by VAUBAN, behind which Marshal VILLARS arrested the victorious march of MARLBOROUGH. On the German side of this frontier, and a little distant from it, is a long line of railway, extending from Treves, near Luxembourg, south-east along the valley of the Saar to Saarbrück, thence in an irregular line to the eastward through Homburg, Kaiserslautern, Neustadt, to the junction of the lines which run down the Rhine, and extend to the north-east, to connect with the great system of German roads in Bavaria.

IMPORTANCE OF THE PLACE.

It is very natural that this line should be considered of the greatest strategic importance by the Germans, who could pour over it with the greatest facility the entire forces of Bavaria while from the direction of Bingen and the road from Mayence, up the Rhine, the more northern countries could pour southward their contingents. The advantage of Germany in railway communication with her French frontier are far greater than those possessed by France, to reach the German frontier. Here there is found the great secret of the superiority of force which the French Army finds on its front thus early in the history of the war. Naturally, as France provoked the struggle, and consequently knew that the war was to take place, it was expected that she would strike a terrific blow, and cross the German frontier with a dash. France expected to be able to do so—the whole world adopted the idea without studying the problem. When, however, the French Army reached the frontier, it found that united Germany could give France at least a week the advantage in time, and meet her on the frontier line with an equal number of troops. This accounts for the inactivity of the French Army, contrary to all expectation.

WHAT THE FRENCH FOUND OUT.

The Emperor found that more troops were necessary before he could really assume the offensive with the hope of making a brilliant campaign on German soil. Still, the French strategists do not appear to understand that, while "eight days" may give France a battle line of 450,000 men, the reasons above mentioned may give Germans a battle line of 600,000. When the French Emperor struck Saarbrück—the great salient angle of the German frontier line of railway I have mentioned,—he felt what there was in front of him, and knew from the light defense of the position that the German Generals meant wild work in some other quarter, where, while striking heavily, they might inflict serious injury, and defend Saarbrück at the same time.

IMPORTANCE OF RAILWAYS.

And here let me remark that the military men of Europe, although appreciating to a certain extent the great value of railway communication in a campaign, have not had sufficient experience in what may be called railway strategy to see the full value of the iron road over the old carriage roads. When campaigns are discussed in Europe, they are generally based upon the old lines followed by the Generals of the early part of this century. I know that here in the French Army you have constantly cited to you that "in the days of the French Revolution" such and such a campaign took place, "planned by our best military talent. NAPOLEON advanced by such a line; such were the dispositions of our forces made by Marshal this or that." They do not fully recognize that the strategic positions of 1800 are not those of 1870. They do not recognize that a railway does away with many topographical features once taken into account. This lesson taught to us in the United States by the severest experience, has yet to be fully learned in Europe. The campaign of Magenta and Sadowa gave them the first realization of the truth; but a European army accepts an idea only by having it well pounded in, as witness Austria, that had her eyes opened to progress only by a terrible thrashing at Sadowa, a thrashing that she has turned to a greater advantage than if it had been a victory.

THE PRUSSIAN POSITION.

A glance at the railway map of Northern France and Southern Germany will show how splendidly posted the German troops were just as the French attempted an advance on Saarbrück. The German right rested on Saar-louis, with a thin line thrown back in the direction of Treves, but with the greater part of the wing in easy reach of the former place. Gen. von Bittenfield was in command of this wing. The centre was to the rear of Saarbrück, near Neunkirchen. The left was near Lauterbourg and Wissembourg, and troops from all directions were pouring in to prepare for the great blow meditated by the Crown Prince upon the French right under McMahon. From right to left of the German lines the communications were perfect, and it might be said that one day they might fight two-thirds of their army at Saar-louis, and the following day fight with two-thirds of their entire force in any defense they might require to make upon their left. The French Generals understood the position, and, it may be said, that it looked to them, with the 250,000 men under their command, that it was one not to be attacked with impunity.

FRANCE TO TAKE THE OFFENSIVE.

Several councils of war took place with reference to it at Metz. It appeared that, at these councils, there was hesitation and great uncertainty as to the measures to be undertaken to force the formidable line. I am assured that they never dreamed for a moment that the Germans intended to act upon the offensive. It was taken for granted that Germany had conceded the initiative to France as a right, and that German patience could not be worked up to the point of launching an army across the frontier to meet French élan half way. In the meantime, while the German Army had its right refused, and its centre and left preparing for the hot work of the heights of Saarbrück and for Wissembourg and Woerth, the French line had its right, under McMahon, resting on Haguenau, the centre on the south and west of Bitsche, while the left, also with its flank refused, lay to the south of Saarbrück, with Frossard's command pushed to the front. The connection between McMahon's corps and right of the French centre was very imperfect, for the hills or low mountains of the Vosges did not offer the same advantages of communication that presented themselves along the rest of the French lines.

SAARBRUCK, WISSEMBOURG, AND WOERTH.

Such was approximatively the positions of the great contending armies when the French struck the light blow at Saarbrück. The retort on the part of the Germans was a sharp one, and when it came, at Wissembourg, it opened the eyes not only of the army but of Paris, which was thunderstruck that the recoil of Saarbrück should fall at Wissembourg, so far distant. The French had no time given to them to pass more troops through the defiles of the Vosges. It was a case where the army corps of McMahon had to stand the brunt of whatever force the enemy chose to throw against it. A few divisions from the corps of Canrobert and de Failly were, in hot haste, sent to McMahon's assistance, but they availed but little, and only seemed to prolong for a time a desperate fight against great odds. The Crown Prince, doubtless, had eighty thousand troops under his command at Woerth, while McMahon, at the most, numbered fifty thousand. The latter were, however, well posted, and only retired when the battle was hopelessly lost. To some extent the retreat was a route, when the regiments broke into disorder and lost all semblance of organization. The first news we had at Nancy was that the corps of McMahon was retreating on Bitsche, but it appears that this was a movement requiring more time than McMahon had at his disposal, with a bold enemy prosecuting him with merciless energy. Moreover, to retreat on Bitsche was to uncover the Strasbourg and Paris road, and give the Crown Prince the chance of completely doubling up the French right, and throwing it in confusion upon the centre. This would have entirely wrecked the French Army, and would have made the stronghold of Metz the only salvation against a complete route by being struck on the left flank by the magnificent army of Prince Frederick Charles, now facing the French centre.

DESPERATE POSITION OF THE FRENCH.

The French right must now hold to the passes of the Vosges with desperate tenacity, or the Crown Prince will yet accomplish what appears to be his great object—the turning of the French right. Yesterday the German centre was facing Metz at St. Avold, with their advance thrown a little forward. The German Army appears to occupy much the same line which the French occupied a few days ago, although the tactical disposition of its corps is different. It is feared here that the Crown Prince may at any moment, by his superior railway communications, be able to mass a sufficient number of troops to cut the railway from Strasbourg to Paris, and force a passage along its line through the Vosges, and, debouching with his victorious troops into the beautiful valley of the Moselle, march on Nancy. To defend this anticipated movement, immense bodies of men are pouring into Nancy and marching to the front. They appear to swarm in over the road from Paris, and are pushed to the north or to the south-east as they may be detailed, either to the corps in front of Metz or to the lines to the eastward. They are determined to make a most desperate fight of it, and although the late battles have thrown their gasconade a little into the shade, they now go forward to defend France instead of to attack Germany. Your readers will recognize how much this means to a Frenchman.

RESULTS OF A FRENCH DEFEAT.

If the French right be again beaten, you may expect a withdrawal of the French Army from its present lines. It cannot afford to give a great decisive contest on the right, and hold the left again inactive in front of Metz; for this would subject it to the loss of almost its entire force, in case of defeat. The French left rests today on Metz, as upon a support all needful. If they can bring the enemy to battle near St. Avold a few days hence, it will, undoubtedly, be the best thing possible; but I fear they cannot do it. The German Generals are too wise to let slip the splendid chance of seizing the Paris railway from Strasbourg, and forcing the French Army in this manner back into the heart of France to the defense of the capital, rather than the defense of the frontier.

M'MAHON'S POSITION.

Gen. McMahon is at Saverne, watching his dashing foe. He is sixty-five miles from Metz in a direct line, and about ninety by the most direct road communication. The whole French Army may be said to lie in a curve to the southward, between Saverne and Metz. The position of the French Army could not well be worse. If the Crown Prince strikes McMahon's First Corps again, and Prince Frederick Charles and the victorious von Steinmetz, with their enthusiastic forces, press down upon the French centre through the plains of Lorraine, it will require much better generalship than the French have yet shown to resist the onslaught. All day Friday last Prince Frederick Charles was pressing toward the southward from Kaiserslautern with the finest, best equipped, and most numerous of all the German Armies. Friday night there were over fifty thousand men between Kaiserslautern and Boland coming south from Mayence. The German force actually in the field must be about four hundred thousand men. There is no doubt, even in the minds of French officers here, that Germany can place more available force on her frontier than France can possibly bring to bear upon it; while the German forces can be supplied to greater advantage, and move with greater facilities over the railway lines.

DISAFFECTION AMONG THE FRENCH.

The dissatisfaction of the French Army and of France with its commanders is loud and deep. We have almost arrived at the pitch reached in the French Revolution of 1793, when for a French General to lose a battle was equivalent to the actual loss of his head. The army well attributes its disasters to the bad plans of its Generals. Lebœuf, one of Napoleon's military parasites, goes into disgrace to give place to Bazaine, while the telegraph tells me that Paris is overturning the Ollivier Cabinet, and that wild work is threatened by the over-bold and talented Radical Party of the "Left."

GEN. BAZAINE.

Francois Achille Bazaine is well known in the United States as the officer who replaced Forey in Mexico. He is fifty-nine years of age, rather stout, and with the head of a cunning soldier. He is the only French Marshal now prominent who found his baton in his knapsack. He comes from a military family, but has more administrative than purely military capacity. He is good at politics and scheming. He would have made a better and more important mark in history had he been brought up a merchant, if one may judge from his history in Mexico, for his mercantile agents from Vera Cruz to Mazatlan could always undersell every other house in Mexico. This, however, was not surprising, when it is considered that French war transports charged no freight on Bazaine's goods, which also passed the Custom-houses in a manner most detrimental to the revenues of Maximilian. Gen. Trochu, I learn, is to be Bazaine's Chief of Staff. Herein I find the only redemption for French military operations; for I have not a particle of faith in Bazaine himself, whose military head will possibly be lopped off within thirty days in the same summary manner that heads disappear here in times of excitement. Trochu may redeem him, for Trochu is universally recognized in the army as its ablest officer.

GEN. TROCHU.

Louis Jules Trochu is fifty-five years of age, and while a good officer, holds the rare combination of being a good orator and writer at the same time. He has great energy, and that iron constitution necessary to a good soldier. His eyes are small, quick and clear. He has both good and bad points, is revengeful and generous at the same time; his bold, frank and intelligent face is rather attractive to all who come in contact with him. He has a promising chance for the general command of the French Army when Bazaine disappears. When Charles V. retired from the siege of Metz in 1553, after ten months of fruitless effort to overthrow the defense of the Duke de Guise, he exclaimed, "Fortune is a woman; she favors the young." Guise was at this time thirty years of age. It might be well for the French people if they would exclaim the same about their own Generals, who are, despite their great military experience, a drag rather than a directing force of the French Army. Bazaine is fifty-nine; Lebœuf, just toppled over, is sixty-one; Canrobert, who struck for fortune and glory by the side of Louis Napoleon at Bayonne, is sixty-one; Montauban is seventy-four—his Dukedom of Palikao comes from his 60,000,000 francs plundered from the Orientals, and paid into the French Treasury; Frossard is sixty-three, McMahon sixty-two, Failly sixty-two and Felix Douay fifty-two years of age.

FRENCH GENERALS TOO OLD.

You must agree with me that most all this material is too old to keep pace with French demands for activity in such a war as this. It is little to predict that if the war lasts six months, but few of them will be foremost in the eyes of the military world. I may make an exception of Felix Douay, who was Bazaine's right-hand man in Mexico, and who is of great ability, and a noble, fine soldier, commanding much admiration.

EFFECTS OF THE BATTLE OF WOERTH.

The excitement existing in Paris over the partial defeat of the French Army at Woerth, has acted badly on the troops. It shows a lack of confidence in the army by the people, which has its reciprocal effect, and makes the army doubt the support of the people. One thing certain, Napoleon finds himself playing a heavy stake, with his crown for a dice-box. I doubt if he now dare to return to Paris without a victory to usher him into its fortifications. Rumors of great movements are coming in all the time, but nothing is sufficiently certain to write about.... Before this letter reaches you, the telegraph must announce a great series of battles. There is but one hope for the French Army, and that is to make a desperate effort to resume the offensive. If it give time for the Germans to take advantage of their recent successes, you will have the French Revolution over again. A crown lost, a Committee of Safety, the Republic, a people driven to desperation, a magnificent military effort, a rolling back of the German tide to its own frontier, and then peace.

AN EX-OFFICER OF THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

ON THE FRENCH SIDE.

Notes From Paris—The People Arming—Ireland's Enthusiasm for the French—The Losses in Recent Engagements.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Paris, Wednesday, Aug. 10, 1870.

Your Paris correspondent must pardon me if I trespass for the moment upon his domain. For the moment, the interest of the war centres in Paris. Three days ago she celebrated a victory yet to be won—being won perhaps while I am writing. Yesterday the Legislature met amid vast crowds, held in check by a strong military force. The address of the Ministry was scarcely listened to. Jules Favre proposed to remove the Emperor from the command of the army, to form a committee of public safety, to arm all citizens; proposed, in short, a revolution. M. de Cassagnac proposed to hand Jules Favre and his supporters over to a Court-martial to be shot. "Will you have us shot?" cried the Opposition. "Seulement!" was the cool reply of the Duc de Grammont. "That's all!" And there arose such a storm as one seldom sees even in a French Assembly. It ended however, in a vote of want of confidence and the formation of a new Ministry.

THE FRENCH FORCES.

There are forty thousand troops in Paris. Marines and artillerymen are arriving from the unthreatened sea-board, and a few days will make all ready for a siege—as if there were any real danger. For the Prussians must first defeat the Army of the Rhine and take the frontier fortresses. They have, it is true, badly handled and driven back two out of five corps of the army. They have taken some hundreds of prisoners and a great booty—the military chest of Marshal McMahon, eagles, colors, guns, and even six of the famous mitrailleuses, of which, it seems, they have besides a few of their own. But their own losses have been very heavy, they have had the advantage of overwhelming numbers, and the greater advantage, it would seem, of a strange want of strategy and secrecy on the part of the French commanders. It is said that while the French have entirely failed in obtaining accurate information of the numbers and movements of the enemy, the Prussians have plenty of spies everywhere—hundreds here in Paris constantly telegraphing to England about their uncles, aunts and cousins, and all sorts of innocent persons and things, which read quite differently when they have got round through Belgium or England to Germany, and there is an angry demand that every Prussian shall be expelled from France. It would be much better for the army to guard its secrets.

ENTHUSIASM AND UNITY OF THE PEOPLE.

My opinion is that these checks, and even disasters, at the beginning, are not misfortunes for those who suffer them. It may even be that they are the result of strategic combinations. They do not affect, or, rather, they have improved, the morale of the nation. They bring out all the courage and devotion of the people. Even the light-hearted, pleasure-loving Parisians have become more firm and serious. The turbulent students of the Quartier Latin are volunteering. Large manufacturers are arming their workmen at their own expense, and going to lead them against the enemy, leaving their wives and daughters to attend to business at home. Some journalists are angry because the French did not invade Germany. It is not clear that a campaign on French territory is not an advantage. With two or three millions of Frenchmen in arms, there will not be an easy road to Paris, and it would be a still harder one back again. Even an undisputed march would take twenty days, and think of investing Paris! The Emperor has been advised by his Generals to return. His answer was "death or victory." I do not, as an impartial neutral, feel myself quite able to appreciate the expression. I like much better what he said of the war—that it would be long and difficult. If he has the firmness to seize the rule of affairs and hold it with a strong hand, he will do what France needs and requires. The late Ministry has been swept away by the Prussian artillery. Paris is, and needs to be under martial law. A constitutional Government and an opposition may be all very well in times of peaceful progress; but in war there must be a Government, and one that will make itself obeyed. If the whole people are united in the support of such a Government so much the better; and I am not sure that what is necessary for war may not also be useful in peace.

THE IRISH FOR FRANCE.

Ireland, I see, is as enthusiastic for the French as ever; and its Press talks more boldly of its nationality. Why should England defend the independence of Belgium and deny self-government to Ireland, which has natural, not artificial boundaries? There is no militia to be called out in Ireland—the Irish are not to be trusted with arms. The military authorities are busy, and guns are being mounted to defend the mouth of the Thames—against whom? Not Prussia certainly. A Channel pilot, it seems, took the French fleet through the Straits of Dover. The Prussian Government demands that he be punished, but Trinity House refuses to prosecute.

LOSSES IN RECENT ENGAGEMENTS.

From the best information I can gather, the losses in the recent engagements were so serious for those who claim the victory, that they may be considered as drawn battles. The Prussians were in no condition to pursue their advantages. The French retired upon strong positions, and have had time to make new dispositions and receive heavy reinforcements. But I forget how vain are such speculations when the results must already have reached you. In the meantime, Paris sings the Marseillaise. MONADNOCK.

FRANKFORT ON THE MAIN.

Great Changes Wrought by the War—The Sick and Wounded of Both Armies—Care of Them by the People—Patriotism of the Soldiers.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Frankfort on the Main, Wednesday, Aug. 10, 1870.

Frankfort forms a central point for railway communication between the Northern and Southern States of Germany, the highway, as it were, to the principal Spas; in fact the half-way house between Berlin and Paris. The hotels and railroad depots of the city have ever served as a place of rendezvous to all comers. Invalids, pleasure-seekers, Alpine explorers, gamblers and demi monde of every nation formed at all times a gay and motley crowd. But, alas! what change has come over the scene! The trains to Homburg and Wiesbaden have ceased to run, and the more primitive mode of conveyance is now in use between those places. The railroad depots are closed. On the other hand the greatest excitement prevails at the depot of the Main-Neckar Road—i. e., the road leading to Mayence, Mannheim, &c. &c. The excitement, however, is not occasioned by the gay and animated crowd we were wont to meet in former seasons.

THE SICK AND WOUNDED.

Ever since Sunday trains have been coming in at regular intervals from two to three hours, loaded with sick and wounded. The melancholy spectacle which I have witnessed will long cling to the recollections associated with this unhappy war, if, indeed, it can ever be effaced, for these scenes strike deeper into our memory than witnessing of the carnage itself. The trains bring us indiscriminately Frenchmen, Prussians, or Bavarians, wounded either at the battle of Wissembourg or at Woerth. The Bavarians are sent either to Hanau or Wurzburg; the French partly to Homburg, where large hospitals have been provided. The Prussians go on to Cassel; they all belong, more or less, to the Eleventh Army Corps, composed of Hessians. A few of the wounded, whose homes are at or near Frankfort, of course remain, and also those where further fatigue by travel might prove fatal. Most of the men on reaching Frankfort have had twenty-four hours' travel, and require medical or surgical attention. The inhabitants of this wealthy city had formed at the outset a committee for the purpose of furnishing refreshments to troops passing through on their way to the seat of war. The same gentlemen have assumed the responsibility of affording medical and other assistance to the sick and wounded. They have in all haste formed into a sanitary corps, divided into squads of twelve men, with a captain. Three or more squads attend at the depot on the arrival of each train, and, with the assistance of all medical aid the city can afford, nothing is left undone to make the men comfortable, and to alleviate their sufferings as much as possible, the ladies attending to furnish coffee, or cold and soothing drinks. The wounds of the men are washed and dressed when required, and lint and bandages are furnished; sticks to those who are for the time deprived of the use of a leg or a foot. Having volunteered my services, I was readily accepted and enrolled. It gave me an opportunity, of which I would otherwise have been deprived, to observe that nothing was left undone which kindness and thoughtfulness could suggest. French and Germans, all were treated alike; indeed, if one received a preference over another, it was always in favor of a Frenchman. Among the wounded, were, so far, not many desperate cases, though it is more than probable that they are kept back, or sent to hospitals in Baden or Wurtemberg, rather than let the men suffer from from heat on the cars. As a remarkable feature, I would mention that wounds in the feet, and below the knee, seemed to preponderate. To judge from what I saw, there must have been forty to fifty per cent., while from thirty to forty per cent. had been wounded either in the head, shoulder or arms, a good few cases in the abdomen. The battle having been fought on French ground, it is reasonable to suppose that the larger portion of their wounded have been removed to their own homes, and that the French wounded sent down here are composed of casualties which occurred during the earlier part of the day, or include the more desperate cases. Among a batch of fifteen or twenty French officers of various grades, I counted at least two cases which I fear must prove fatal. With the exception of a few officers, who appeared retired and reticent, they were chatty and gay, as far as circumstances would permit.

POST-OFFICE CARDS.

Two or three gentlemen of the Sanitary Committee were detailed to distribute Post-office cards, by means of which the men are enabled to communicate with their friends. This is a most acceptable arrangement. It is an innovation lately introduced by the German Post-office authorities, and I have taken the liberty some time ago to draw the attention of the Postmaster-General at Washington to the subject. It dispenses with the necessity of asking for paper and envelopes, as these cards may be carried in everybody's pocket-book. On the printed side you fill up address and destination, and on the reverse any message you may desire to communicate. These open letters are forwarded gratis for soldiers through the "Feldpost." I made it my business on several occasions to go among the Frenchmen. They gave me the address of their friends, which I noted on the card, merely writing on the reverse side: "Slightly wounded; fear nothing; I am taken care of." The gratitude of some of these men was most touching. I am not given much to romance, but I confess I had to restrain myself. All were highly elated at the idea that they had thus the means of telling their friends that they were still among the living. One poor fellow, in particular, impressed me with the necessity of being accurate in putting down the address of his widowed mother, at Lyons. Among another batch I found two youngsters, who said that so precipitate had been their departure they had not time to communicate with their friends on leaving the garrison. They were nearly frantic with joy when they learnt what I had done for some of their comrades, and as a matter of course, were ready to do for them likewise. The Germans, of course, had more facility to obtain what they wanted. Moreover, it was quite evident that they considered themselves recipients of attention they were justly entitled; the Frenchmen, on the other hand, being prisoners of war. There are some ugly stories afloat in regard to atrocities committed by Turcos. I heard some very strong language expressed on the subject. Looking upon the whole as a mere canard, I pass by the subject. In the meantime I was assured by a Prussian officer that "no quarter" would be given hereafter to black men. It would be difficult for me to reiterate the wild language and the indignation expressed against the French in consequence of bringing these Algerian soldiers into the field. LUPUS.

The Royal Family and Its Connection—Who is to Blame for the War?—Character of the Soldiers of Both Armies—The Result of the War.

From Our Special Correspondent.

Frankfort on the Main, Thursday, Aug. 11, 1870.

The King of Prussia is still hale and hearty; he enjoys excellent health, but it must be remembered that he has passed "three score and ten." With his demise, the reins of Government must pass into the hands of Frederick William, his son. This Prince is married to a sister of Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, who in due course of time will occupy the throne of England. The Princess of Wales, future Queen of England, is a sister to the heir presumptive of the crown of Denmark. A second sister will hereafter appear as Empress of Russia, while a brother occupies the throne of Greece. Thus the Sovereigns of England, Russia, Prussia, Denmark and Greece will form, at no distant period, a nice little family circle, and the party would have received an important addition by placing on the Spanish throne Prince Leopold of Hohenzollern, closely connected with the Prussian dynasty, a brother to the reigning Prince of Roumania, and at the same time brother-in-law to the King of Portugal and the King of the Belgians. Have these family arrangements influenced the mind of the French Emperor? Some think not, and point to the fact, that while family dissensions are of common occurrence in private life, the existence of consanguinity among the Sovereigns of Europe would prove baneful to their private interests. On the other hand, it is contended that common danger will always prove a motive power sufficiently strong to produce a unit in all its bearings on leading questions. Each of your readers will naturally draw his own inferences from these observations. The truth is, the people know, as yet, little or nothing of this affair. Under the circumstances, to exonerate either party from blame, or to throw the whole weight of responsibility on the other, would be unfair. Both sides, France as well as Prussia, claim justification. To take up any one-sided argument would be unfair. Again, it would seem more than probable that the ultimate result of the contest will rebound on the aggressor, whosoever that may prove to be. Deep disappointment may follow in the wake of a victory. The matter of cause and effect may be directly reversed, and the winner may ultimately find out that the attainment of the object was directly opposed to what he had hoped or desired. He may be reminded of the epitaph of the hypochondriac, who, though well in health, was not easy until he had quacked himself into his grave.

THE SOLDIERS OF THE CONTENDING ARMIES.

It has been my privilege to see on the 22d and 23d July the French regiments of Guards march out of Paris, and again on the 29th July I witnessed the Prussian Guards leaving Berlin. No troops could have been in finer condition, and the sight on either side was equally impressive in the highest degree. They are now standing face to face between Metz and the Prussian frontier, each sighing for victory, and wishing that,

"If to-morrow's sun be thine,
With double lustre shall it shine."

Just three years ago the contest between some of these regiments appeared in a milder and more pleasing form. During the International Exhibition, in 1867, an opportunity was given of testing which side had attained the highest standard among their musical bands. Visitors to Paris recall with infinite pleasure the great international concerts, where the military bands of various nations had gathered, eager to test their superior merits, and to compete for a prize generously offered by the French nation. If I am not mistaken, the final struggle was laying between the Garde de Paris and the Fifty-ninth Regiment of Prussians. All this seems now forgotten. Though it seems only like yesterday, not a vestige remains of the mutual vows of friendship made three years ago, and which were intended, nay, given and taken, as a bond of everlasting unity. The concert of today is of another kind. The same troops are now called upon to show the world the relative superiority either of the Chassepot or of the needle-gun. They are bid by their officers to load and reload with strange industry—they must make all possible haste to kill and maim each other, as though their lives depended upon the quantity of the slaughter they can get through in some given space of time.

"With fire and sword the country round
Was wasted far and wide.
* * * * * * *
"But things like that you know must be
After a famous victory."

WHAT CAN BE GAINED BY THE WAR.

It is a harrowing thought that the poet's description of Blenheim, which we are taught to look upon as belonging to another age, should, mutatis mutandis, be handed down to our children. And probably like old Kaspar, when asked what good come of it at last, the answer will be: Why, that I cannot tell. What, indeed, can be gained on either side? The French, if victorious, might have had the chance of possessing themselves of the Rhenish provinces. It is probable this might have been accomplished two or three weeks ago. At the present moment it is a matter of moral impossibility. French Armies can now be kept at a respectable distance. Moreover, if ever they had succeeded to reach the Rhine, they would not have been suffered to remain in those regions for any length of time. On the other hand, what can the Prussians gain? If victorious, will they claim Alsace? I am unwilling to believe it. Alsace has been a French province ever since 1681. If the Prussian Armies continue to be victorious, it is quite evident that the French Emperor cannot hold his own any longer, and under the circumstances the prophecies of the First Napoleon, that Europe would either become Muscovite, or Republican, may be realized at no very distant date. With the downfall of the Empire, the Republic would be introduced in France. Spain would follow suit at once. Garibaldi, Mazzini, and other Italian patriots, would hardly remain idle, and Italy would adopt Republican institutions. The question is would Germany be able to withstand the pressure coming from without? I do not for a moment doubt that all these events, or rather the probabilities thereof, have been duly considered by Count Bismarck. And, if this be so, it cannot be his interest to see the Emperor Napoleon humiliated.

Can there be Peace?

From the New-York Standard, Aug. 24.

The well-meaning but excitable newspapers, who have insisted upon regarding the part taken by Prussia in this war as that of a self-sacrificing champion of liberty, are now giving indications that the time has come to make peace. Some of the suggestions upon which peace is to be proclaimed are original and striking. The Tribune allows a correspondent to advance this bold theory:

"Since France is so revolutionary and such a disturber of the peace of Europe, why would it not be well for the Great Powers to divide France between them?"

We presume that the Tribune has thrown this suggestion into the form of a letter for the purpose of feeling public opinion in this country. The suggestion that France could be divided has the merit of consistency at least. The division of Poland, in which Prussia (we presume in the interests of liberty and nationality) took so prominent a part, was accomplished so successfully, that it is only fair that the Tribune should draw the proper conclusion from that event, and insist that the same regard for liberty and free government which dictated the partition treaty should control the statesmanship of Prussia and the other Great Powers in their treatment of France.

If there is any attainable authority on the history of the French people within the reach of the editors of the Tribune they might give their readers an interesting chapter, detailing the former experiments of the "Great Powers" in controlling this "revolutionary" France. Since no information on that subject seems to have reached them, we may be pardoned for mentioning one or two facts.

When France had endured for 800 years the tyranny of the old Bourbon system, a tyranny that brought with it poverty, ignorance and famine, engendered every conceivable form of debauchery and crime among the aristocracy, and entailed wretchedness upon the people—the Bastile, the Parc au Cerf, the octroi duties, taxes upon salt, bread and travel—its citizens revolted and proclaimed a republic just as we, in America, when we felt the injustice of English legislation. France, awakened from its oppression, fell into the excesses of revolution, and was like the blind man who saw men as trees walking. Whatever that revolution may have shown in terror and tragedy, beneath it all there was a sublime manifestation of self-denial and courage and patriotism which no people in the world has ever excelled.

It was then proposed to suppress this "revolutionary France," this "disturber of the peace!" Armies were sent to accomplish that purpose, and shoeless, hungry, ragged France drove combined Europe across her borders, and for twenty years not only held it at bay, but marched its soldiers into every European capital, with the exception of London. This interference on the part of the "Great Powers" created more debt, imposed more taxes, sacrificed more lives, and, taken altogether, was perhaps the most disastrous experiment that ever was attempted by King or Cabinet. In the end, France was the great nation that she always has been, and, as the London Times recently remarked, powerful enough to be the "arbiter of the destinies of Europe."

The victories of the Germans have been incessant and decisive. So were the victories of the Germans under the Duke of Brunswick when they marched to the rescue of King Louis and his Court. A single battle compelled them to retreat from France, as history records, reduced to a deplorable state, "dysentery and famine making great inroads upon them." The campaign of 1814 showed what France could do even when more embarrassed than she is today. In that campaign Paris was taken, but only at a price so terrible that the victorious Powers have not yet recovered from their loss.

History is full of suggestive reflections upon the subject of dividing France as the "disturber of the peace of Europe." In the interest of national freedom we feel confident that out of any such experiment a new republic will rise, with all the glory of the old one, but chastened by its experience. We therefore sincerely trust that "the Great Powers" of Europe will demand a peace upon the basis indicated by the Tribune. The end will be, we are confident, not only a republic in France, but republicanism all over Europe.

In this advanced age France and England and Austria and Prussia are too free, too great, to be hampered and embarrassed in their progress by a monarchical system which drains the resources of the country and keeps the Continent on the constant verge of war. The truth about this war is that Hohenzollern and Bonaparte are alike the enemies of mankind. Peace will not be peace, unless the system of standing armies and hereditary dynasties, conscription and arbitrary taxation, and vain struggles to maintain rivers and mountain ranges as boundary lines are abolished. France is great, and Germany is great! In the eyes of Providence they are brothers. Europe is large enough for them. What they want is fraternity, peace, and mutual confidence!

The outside interference of "the Great Powers" is a suggestion worthy of the tyranny of the feudal ages.

BLASTING AT HALLET'S POINT.

Complaints of Criminal Carelessness on the Part of the Government Officials—An Injunction Sought—Fatal Wounding of a Workman—The People in Terror.

The progress made in the removal of the obstructions at Hallet's Point is very slow, indeed, as the drilling has to be done now entirely by hand. The mine is about sixty feet in diameter, and from it, in a semi-circular form, six "headings," dignified with the names of Gens. Humphreys, Newton, Sherman, Grant, McClellan and Franklin, are being cut under the water. The base of the mine itself is about twenty feet deep, but it is designed to make make it ten feet deeper. In a few days the steam drilling-machine will be lowered into the mine, and more rapid progress will then be made. The work, however, will hardly be completed, it is said, within five years. Three gangs of thirty men each, working eight hours, are kept steadily employed day and night, but in such hard rock they cannot accomplish much.

Great carelessness is manifested in the blasting operations, and the people living or doing business in the vicinity of the Point are kept in constant dread for their lives, owing to the pieces of rock that fall so thick and fast about their places. These pieces weigh from five to seventy-five pounds, and are hurled from seventy-five to five hundred feet distant. The explosions, too, are sometimes so heavy that the houses are shaken. The oil works of Messrs. Stuber & Co., which are nearest to the scene of operations, suffer most. This firm had been obliged under the management of Capt. Pierce, to suspend business for about a year, because they could not get men willing to risk their lives thus foolishly. When Mr. Reitheimer took charge of the mining, trusting to his assurances they repaired their works and resumed the manufacture of oil; but they will have to stop work again unless the Courts interfere to protect them. They have placed the matter in the hands of Judge Beach, who expects in a few days to procure an injunction against the careless Government officials.

The fires have to be kept continually burning in the oil-stills, day and night, and must be carefully watched, so that a steady uniform heat may be preserved during the distilling process, and to guard against explosions. On Saturday last, the still-man, who lives adjacent to the works, and but 195 feet distant from the mine, had a narrow escape from death or maiming. While renewing his fires a fifteen pound piece of rock crushed through the frame side of the still-house, and fell within a foot of where he stood. His family are obliged to keep within doors to escape death and danger, so rapidly and thick do the rock missiles fall around their dwelling.

Another heavy piece of rock broke in the side of the office, 192 feet from the mine, and the book-keeper was saved by a stout plank which intervened between him and the stone. A few days ago another piece, weighing seventy-five pounds, after having been hurled 500 feet in the air, was buried two feet in the ground, from whence it was taken by Mr. Stuber, who still preserves it as a mute witness against the careless miners. Should a piece of rock fall upon and break any of the still-connecting pipes so as to admit air to the oil, a conflagration would ensue that nothing could suppress until it had exhausted itself. A short time ago the faucet of the crude petroleum tank was maliciously broken off, and seventy gallons of the liquid floated and soaked away into the mine, only seventy-six feet distant, where it became ignited, and blazed away next day until it was consumed. Stuber & Co. have $60,000 invested in their oil works, and they are naturally indignant that their rights should not be better respected, especially when, according to Mr. Reitheimer, a pebble need not be allowed to escape from the mine or headings.

But this carelessness sometimes becomes fatal to the workmen themselves. On Monday, a man named Wallace had his skull fractured and his collar-bone and several ribs broken by a heavy timber which fell on him. He was removed to his boarding-house, and surgical aid procured, but on Tuesday he was sent to hospital, and his recovery is considered doubtful.

The Drake Estate—Meeting of the Supposed Heirs.

A meeting of the supposed heirs to the estate of Sir Francis Drake in England, was held, yesterday, at the Brandreth House, in this City, to hear the report of Dr. Beckwith, of Philadelphia, who has been engaged for some time past in trying to trace out the line of descent so far as to substantiate the claim of the American family of Drakes to the inheritance. There was quite a large attendance, numbering seventy-five or more, well-dressed people, two-thirds of whom were ladies. Dr. Beckwith read a very lengthy report, giving the results of his investigations into the records of the Drake family in this country and their supposed connection with Sir Francis. The conclusion of the matter was, that a break had been discovered in the chain of descent, which, without further research, would leave the claim of the American heirs unestablished; but the doctor was of the opinion that the gap could be supplied by continuing the investigation, and he was confident that the American Drakes were the lineal descendants and the rightful heirs of the property, which is valued at several millions of pounds, and lies principally in Devonshire, England. The heirs in this country are scattered over many States, but the larger number reside in New-Jersey, New-York and New-England. Dr. Beckwith presented a financial report giving the expenses attending his investigations, from which it appeared that he had spent nearly $400 more than he had received, and, as he said he was not interested to the amount of a penny in the claim, he declined to proceed any further in his researches, unless he was reimbursed and his future expenses guaranteed. The report appeared to give general satisfaction, and was unanimously adopted, and, on motion, a subscription was taken up to continue the effort to substantiate the claim, after which the meeting adjourned.

The Central Bank Failure—A Deficiency of $300,000.

An examination of the affairs of the Central Bank, Brooklyn, has developed the fact that it is deeply and, indeed, hopelessly involved. It is now officially announced that the stockholders will lose not only the amount of their stock, in all $300,000, but as much again, and then the depositors will be compelled to suffer a loss of twenty-five per cent. at least, on their deposits. Things, however, may turn out to be even worse than that should the rumors now current prove true, namely, that many of the securities are good for nothing. President Pruyn, who held $60,000 of the stock, declares that he will not be able to meet the liabilities, and several other gentlemen, who hold about $25,000 of it, claim to be in a similar position. The indignation excited among the merchants and mechanics who had placed their surplus funds in this institution is of the most intense character. Not a few talk of having the President arrested for swindling. In dealing with depositors it is noticeable that the United States Government has had its deposits, $30,000, refunded. Why this distinction should be made, the less favored do not understand. Altogether it is becoming more clear every day, the dissatisfied depositors say, that the funds of the bank have been gambled away on Wall-street. Among other peculiarities, connected with this failure, it is remarkable that not a single joint meeting has yet been held of the stockholders and depositors, although the latter are clamoring for one, so that they may get some positive information on the condition of affairs.

SUBMARINE CABLES.

Some New Facts with Regard to Them—Where They Are—Their Number, and Length—Other Interesting Details.

In these days, despite the mail facilities which all enjoy, the demand for a speedier method of transmitting intelligence has become universal—a demand which fortunately the genius of the age is able to supply. The telegraph has become, therefore, an important and essential feature in all lands and climes. While but a short time ago it was a costly means of transmitting information, and restricted in its operations to comparatively narrow limits, today it girdles the world, and telegraph poles and wires are scattered all over the land. With an increase of its facilities prices have come down to a somewhat reasonable figure, and both the poor and the rich are now enabled to speak with the voice of Jove if they wish to. Every branch of industry has profited by these increased facilities, and no one can accurately estimate the advantages bestowed on men by the discovery and extensive use of the electric telegraph. Armies move at the click of the operator's hammer, and friends converse across oceans as though they were in the same room. At first land wires were the rule, and not until 1851 was the idea of a submarine cable carried into practical execution. Since then the obvious wants of commerce have demanded a greater extent of submarine cables throughout the world. There are already 22,000 miles in active operation, with 27,000 miles of wire. There are 20,328 miles of cable further proposed and under contract. For the former a capital of about $40,000,000 has been expended; for the latter an additional capital is demanded of $45,000,000. A late number of the Banker's Magazine, to which we are indebted for most of the facts in this article, says, the success of submarine lines being once demonstrated, the demands of commerce for extended systems of submarine telegraphs, are beyond anticipation. As this question is now occupying attention, and much exaggeration and misapprehension exist, it will be instructive to analyze the subject in its present condition, and the more so as English and foreign capital combined is about to complete a circumterrestrial telegraphic communication.

Firstly, the commercial view of the question: Can the existing tariff be so reduced that the benefits of the system will be much more extended than at present? And will this reduced tariff be remunerative? An average commercial message is calculated to be composed of thirty words. Skillful operators can attain a working speed of sixteen words per minute. Of course, upon extended lines differences of longitude render active operations throughout the day feasible, this continuous work being carried on by relays of electricians. But the intervals of transmission and receipt, &c., of messages being considered, the working day is practically reduced to twenty hours. In this period 500 messages can be transmitted. These, charged at the Atlantic Cable tariff, would show a return of $18,000; and allowing 300 working days to the year, one Trans-atlantic conductor, for example, would yield an annual profit of $5,400,000. We leave the deduction to be formed from the above answer to the two questions recorded in the foregoing paragraph. Such facts should be words of confidence to the community where practice has proved the practicability of laying submarine cables. In an interesting table of sub marine cables for 1870, we find the following statistics:

Number of cables laid....84
Length of cables, in statute miles....22,007
Miles of insulated wire....27,402
First cable laid in 1851—Dover to Calais....27 miles
Last cable laid in 1870—Aden to Suez....1,469 miles

Dr. Carnochan Arrested on a Charge of Piracy.

In the Supreme Court of Kings County, before Judge Pratt, yesterday, an application was made by Judge Troy for an order for the arrest of John M. Carnochan, Health Officer of New-York, and Kenneth Reed, his assistant, at the suit of James F. Pendergast and Chas. H. Pendergast, for damages arising out of the alleged piratical seizure of the schooner Wavelet at Harbeck's store, on the night of Aug. 10. The circumstances attending this seizure were published at the time it occurred. The vessel, after waiting a couple of days in quarantine, went to Perth Amboy and discharged her cargo; then came back and anchored off the stores named. Dr. Carnochan, it is charged, went with an armed crew on board the Quarantine steamer Fletcher and took forcible possession of the Wavelet, and towed her out to the bay, where she was compelled to stay for eight days. The Court granted the order of arrest, and held the defendants to answer in $5,000 bail each.

The Broom-Stick Homicide.

Coroner Keenan began an inquest, yesterday, in the case of Thomas Shea, who died at the Eye and Ear Infirmary, from the effects of an injury to the eye, inflicted with a broom-stick, at No. 503 Second-avenue, on the 7th inst. Kate McAlove, who resides in the same house, testified that she assisted the deceased to put out a drunken man, and heard Shea say he was hurt in the eye. This was all the evidence taken, and the case was adjourned until Friday.

Police Trials—Drunkenness and Other Offenses.

The industry of the general roundsmen resulted again, yesterday, in an avalanche of complaints, which required both Commissioner Bosworth and Commissioner Brennan, sitting in separate sessions, to dispose of them. The majority of the cases were dismissed, or a reprimand awarded as a nominal punishment, but the roundsmen more frequently received this award than the officers they accused. Roundsman McClintock and Roundsman Dare excited the ire of Commissioner Brennan by refusing to listen to explanations of officers detected in supposed derelictions. Roundsman McGloin has about exhausted the patience of all the Commissioners, and yesterday provoked a stinging rebuke from Mr. Brennan for making a complaint against an officer for being a few feet off his relieving point, which, if true, was considered too trivial for complaint, but which was shown by the officer to be false.

Roundsman Dowdican swore before the Clerk that an officer of the Fourth Precinct had drank a glass of lager-beer while on post, but when he came before the Commissioner he could not say what was drank, and the officer swearing that it was seltzer water, the complaint was dismissed. There was but one serious charge against a patrolman. The case was that of Garrett W. Golden, of the Eighth Precinct, who was found on post in Bleecker-street, helplessly drunk, and was taken into the Station-house in that condition by Sergt. Pickett. Sergts. Williams and Maloney were also witnesses of his intoxication, and the case was referred to the Board.

THE NORWALK DISASTER.

The Investigation Concluded—Additional Details of the Collision—Men, Women and Children Seen Struggling in the Water—Verdict of the Jury.

The inquest over the body of John C. Phalon, who was drowned on the night of the 12th of August through the collision between the steamer Norwalk and the schooner Lady Helen, was resumed, at noon yesterday, before Coroner Whitehill, in Brooklyn.

David Clayton, one of the crew of the Lady Helen, testified as follows: I was standing on the quarter, with the Captain; he told me to go forward and see how the lamps were; this I did, and found the green lamp burning in the rigging in its proper place; I then jumped from the rail on which I had been standing and hollooed to "let her luff;" I then saw the steamer quite close to us; she was about half a mile off on our starboard bow when I first sighted her; she was running across our bow, at least it so appeared to me; after shouting to luff, I ran aft, and by the time I got there the collision occurred, and I got into the yawl-boat along with the other members of the crew; our object in getting into the boat was to secure ourselves; the Captain did not say anything about looking for people in the water; there was a sloop a short distance off, and I desired to get on board of it; there was nothing said about going after any person in the water; the Captain sat at one end of the boat and I at the other; he might have given orders to pull for a man in the water without my hearing him; the wind at the time was to westward; the steam-boat was to windward of us; how she was bearing I cannot tell; don't know whether the schooner changed her course, but I think the steamer did; am not certain whether the Captain made any attempt to luff or not when I called; I told the men on board the sloop that I thought there were some persons in the water; that I thought must be the case not only from the nature of the collision, but from the fact that I saw, when in the small boat, quite a number of objects in the water; I made no effort to save the persons in the water; was so frightened that I thought it my duty to make my own life safe; the Captain desired the crew to get into the schooner again, but they insisted upon going to the sloop; never saw the Captain under the influence of liquor; there was no strong drink on board the schooner; I am positive that the steamer was to windward of us; had she been to leeward of us I could not have seen her; the sails would have prevented me; am not aware that the laws of the State impose any obligation upon sailors in regard to the saving of human life.

Officer John Flanaghan, of the Special Police Squad of New-York, testified that he was on duty on the Norwalk at the time of the collision; he was then on the main deck, forward of the wheel; he did not see the schooner previous to the collision; after that ran aft on the port side, and saw that the rail was carried away, and saw that there were some people in the water; his first impression was that lightning had struck the steamer; some of the passengers threw out benches and stools for those in the water to get hold of; there were no life-preservers around; the rail of the boat was floating in the water, and there were people clinging to it; the boat from the schooner came just at this time, and the people in the water called for assistance; at this time some one cried that the steamer was on fire, on hearing which witness went off to see where it was, and found that it was merely a lamp that had exploded; there was then a rumor set afloat that we were sinking; then went forward to the front where the two vessels had come in contact, and saw people getting on board the schooner; he also saw some persons slip down between the two boats; one woman who was falling he caught and pulled on board; Capt. Wilson examined the steamer, and finding that she was safe, told the passengers to wait on board; some of them, however, insisted on going to the schooner, and they were permitted to go; by this time a tug had come along, and she took the steamer to Red Hook Point; after the steamer left there was a man picked up by the schooner, who said that he had fallen overboard from the steamer when the collision had taken place; one of the Hamilton ferry-boats passed; although signaled to come to the assistance of the vessel in question, it paid no attention; when the Captain of the schooner returned to his vessel, witness asked him if he had picked up the people in the water; he answered that he had not, and said that his crew would not do anything for him; they insisted on making their own lives sure; he said, also, on being asked how the collision occurred, that he did not see the steamer until he was right on her; the first he knew of her presence was when his men shouted to him to luff; he tried to do so, but before it could be done the collision occurred; he said that he did not see any lights on the steamer, and one of the passengers of the Norwalk, to whom he was talking, said he supposed she had no lights up, and that he believed most of the officers were drunk; witness did not see any lights on the steamer; saw the men on board the schooner with lights in their hands that had been taken from the rigging.

Capt. Smith, Superintendent of the pilots of the Union Ferry Company, was examined as an expert. He expressed the opinion that the collision could only have occurred by the schooner's changing her course; that is, if credit were given to the pilot of the steamer for acting like a rational being.

This closed the testimony, and the jury retired, and after being out for several hours returned the following verdict:

John Phelan came to his death by being drowned, on the 12th of August, through a collision caused by the schooner Lady Helen running into the steamer Norwalk, while on her way to New-York from Coney Island.

This closed the proceedings in the case.

BASE-BALL.

Mutuals vs. Forest City—The Home-and-Home Game—The Mutuals Win by One Run.

The third game of the series between the Mutual and Forest City Clubs took place on the Capitoline Grounds yesterday in the presence of about 2,000 spectators, although the charge for admission was double the usual fee, fifty cents being demanded on this occasion. As a closely-contested and finely-played game was anticipated, the extra tariff was not grumbled at, and no one left the ground dissatisfied at not getting the worth of his money.

The game began at 3:20 P. M. with the Mutuals at the bat, and after two lives had been given them by fielding errors they batted the ball safely for 2 runs, the Forest City nine getting but 1 run. This gave the Mutuals the lead. In the second innings it became evident that the ball was not the dead ball agreed upon, and after the Mutuals had sent it bounding over the heads of the in-fielders for 4 runs, the ball was changed for a dead ball. The close of the second innings left the Mutuals in the van by the total of 7 to 3, and it began to look as if they would have a surer thing of it than anticipated. In the next three innings, they added 9 runs to their score by excellent batting and putting out their adversaries for an addition of 5 only; the close of the sixth innings left the tally even at 12 to 12, with the game in an exceedingly interesting position. In the seventh innings the Blue Stockings put out the two first strikers on the Mutual side, and but for a bad throw by Sutton they would have white-washed them; but afterward the Mutuals ran up a score of 3, and as the Blues were equally fortunate, the seventh innings left the score a tie—15 to 15. In the eighth neither party scored a run, and consequently the ninth opened with the game in quite an exciting position. By a good hit of Patterson's the Mutuals added one run to their score, and as the Blue Stockings were whitewashed, the victory remained with the New-Yorkers by the totals of 16 to 15.

The umpire in the sixth inning ruled out Jas. White's delivery as a throw, whereas it is just the same style as all swift pitchers indulge in; so if White, throws they all do. The Forest City left for Baltimore last night, and today they play the Pastime Club there. The score is appended. Of the play on the occasion that of Allison for centre fielding bore off the palm, Patterson excelling on the Mutual side.

Improvements in Station-Houses.

The Board of Police has determined to entirely reconstruct the present House of Detention for witnesses in Mulberry-street, and build upon the site both a House of Detention and a Station-house for the Fourteenth Precinct. The site occupied by the present structure is 50 feet 5 inches front by 100 feet deep, which gives abundant space for both buildings, as the Station-house only requires 30 feet front, and 20 feet 5 inches is believed to be amply sufficient for the House of Detention. While the changes are being made the detained witnesses will be confined in the old Station-house of the Fifth Precinct, in Leonard-street, near West Broadway, which will be fitted up for that purpose. As the result of the contemplated changes, the Department will have two houses on the site of one, and can sell the house in Spring-street now occupied by the Fourteenth Precinct Police, as it will then not be needed for the Department, and from its location is unsuited for any other municipal use.

THE MUTE HOMICIDE.

Investigation in the Case by Coroner Schirmer—Evidence of the Eye-Witnesses—The Prisoner Exonerated and Discharged.

Coroner SCHIRMER held an inquest, yesterday, in the case of DENNIS O'BRIEN, the deaf mute, who died in Bellevue Hospital from the effects of wounds in the back and breast, inflicted with an ice-pick in the hands of FRANK F. DAILKER, a saloon-keeper, at No. 58 Orchard-street.

The first witness called was PATRICK MCGUIRE, of No. 20 Spring-street, a deaf mute, who gave his evidence to another mute, who wrote it out for the Coroner. He said: On the 18th inst., as Mr. MCGUIRE was strolling uptown to see a friend of his about his own situation, and after he came down town, he entered Mr. DEINS' lager-beer saloon in the Bowery, he unexpectedly met Mr. O'BRIEN, (deceased,) and O'BRIEN introduced PAT to his friend, (who was not a mute,) and joined them in a smile only; after parting with O'BRIEN's friend, he and O'BRIEN went up to Thirtieth-street and Third-avenue to pay a brief visit to O'BRIEN's friends, and spent a short time conversing; after this they left, and were treated to a smile only; then they both were slightly tight as either a small boy or girl could stand; they then went down, talking with each other on some news and work; PATRICK stopped O'BRIEN, and told him that he would return home and bid him good-night; but O'BRIEN invited him to enjoy health with him by taking a glass of lager-beer; so they went to No. 58 Orchard-street; O'BRIEN and PAT seeing DAILKER standing behind the bar (as if he wanted to catch poor flies in the webs,) O'BRIEN made signs himself, "Get us two glasses of beer," and pointed to the lager-cask; at that moment DAILKER, angrily, as if he hated mutes, refused to procure them some beer; O'BRIEN again told DAILKER to get us some beer, as he had money enough; immediately DAILKER came and pushed O'BRIEN and PATRICK out of the saloon; at that moment a Police officer was passing, and DAILKER said something about them to him, who accordingly took them up to Grand-street and let them go; O'BRIEN told PAT why we never troubled him, and they were very much surprised to see what DAILKER had done toward them; so O'BRIEN and PAT wanted to know what was the reason he pushed them out; again O'BRIEN and PAT entered the same saloon after some beer; immediately DAILKER pushed them out and seizing the ice-pick, struck PAT's forehead with it; O'BRIEN sprung up to DAILKER in order to save his friend PAT; DAILKER struck O'BRIEN with the same ice-pick in the breast, and O'BRIEN struck DAILKER with his fist, and DAILKER stabbed him in the back with the ice-pick; O'BRIEN dropped down bleeding; PATRICK (the witness) could not see well on account of the blow he received in the head; after the occurrence the Police officer came up and seized all of them; when taken to the Station-house PATRICK could not write on account of the injuries in the forehead; the next morning PAT was brought in front of Judge SCOTT, who discharged him at once; PATRICK was shown the ice-pick by the officer, and he was very much surprised to learn O'BRIEN was stabbed badly; the prisoner struck deceased first and he returned the blow.

WILHELMINE RAUMER was next called, and testified as follows: I reside at No. 58 Hester-street, where I keep a saloon; about half-past nine o'clock on the 18th inst., MCGUIRE and deceased came into the saloon; they were both under the influence of liquor—MCGUIRE more so, who fell in coming down-stairs; MCGUIRE sat down at the table and went to sleep; the deceased took two glasses from the bar, and went behind the bar and shoved me; deceased made signs as if he wanted beer, which I refused by shaking my head; several persons were on the sidewalk, looking in; deceased made a noise by striking the table with his fist; I called to a young man to call my husband, who came, and noticing that they were deaf mutes and wanted beer, but seeing they were drunk, refused; my husband then put them out.

EVA MARKS, being called, testified: I reside at No. 57 Orchard-street; I saw deceased and MCGUIRE go into Mr. HIRTSCH's saloon; I saw both men afterward enter DAILKER's saloon, No. 58 Orchard-street; deceased went forward on the first step; the other (MCGUIRE) stood on the sidewalk; I saw DAILKER take hold of deceased by the shoulders, and turn him around to prevent him from going in; as soon as DAILKER did this the deceased, who had one foot inside the door, turned around, and dragging the prisoner one step, hit him on the forehead with his right hand; DAILKER struck the deceased back, and they had a scuffle for a few seconds, the deceased falling down; DAILKER leaned with his back against the railing and his arms folded; the deceased jumped up and hit the prisoner on the right side of his face; DAILKER returned the blows, striking him two or three times; deceased and MCGUIRE went toward Grand-street; they afterward came back, and I saw deceased push MCGUIRE before DAILKER, and strike DAILKER on the head; DAILKER returned the blow; a crowd gathered, and I saw no more.

EDWARD BURK, being sworn, said—I reside at No. 60 Orchard-st.; am a painter; on the 18th inst., between nine and ten o'clock, I was standing by my wagon, in front of my house; there were three friends of mine called me across the street, and we were talking for a short time, when we saw deceased and the prisoner rushing out of No. 58 Orchard-street; deceased went up the sidewalk toward Grand-street, and the prisoner followed; they had some blows; I saw the prisoner strike deceased, and deceased strike the prisoner back, when about twenty feet from the door; I went up to deceased, and he was bleeding out of the nose, and whatever the prisoner struck him with he put into his pocket; a policeman came up and took deceased toward Grand-street; I did not see him again for twenty minutes; the deceased then came back with MCGUIRE; they went over toward the prisoner (who was standing at his door with his wife;) there was a railing between both parties; deceased raised his hand as if about to strike the prisoner; the prisoner shoved deceased away; deceased backed away from the prisoner, and the prisoner followed him up and struck him on the breast; what he struck him with he put into his pants' pocket; I went over to deceased and saw the blood on his breast; as soon as I saw that, I went over to the prisoner and said, "You stabbed him;" I reached for him, and he backed into his door; when I went back to deceased he fell on the sidewalk; I told an officer to arrest the prisoner, as he had stabbed a man; I held up deceased's head.

CHARLES SIRE, being sworn, said—I reside at No. 59 Orchard-street; I was on the corner of Grand and Orchard streets, when I heard a noise and saw an officer bringing two mutes toward Grand-street; they went toward Ludlow-street; they came back in about ten minutes and they were going into prisoner's saloon, when I saw the prisoner have an ice-pick in his hand; he took a hold of deceased by the shoulder and pushed him away.

Officer FITZPATRICK, of the Tenth Ward, was called and testified as follows: On the night of the 18th as I was coming up toward Grand-street I was attracted by a crowd, and I went to see what was the matter; I asked prisoner if he would make a charge against those men; he said no, and I ordered the crowd to disperse; I went off, and when I came back some one said this man is murdered; I asked who did it; they pointed to DAILKER, and I arrested him.

FRANK FRITCH testified as follows: I live at No. 56 Orchard-street; keep a lager-beer saloon; deceased and MCGUIRE came to see me on last Thursday night, a little after four o'clock; there was not any person with them; both came in and they sat down at the first table; the previous witness had a bundle of dirty wash, and he sat on it; he then got up and shut's door between his saloon and room as the room was full of customers; O'BRIEN made signs to me that he wanted two glasses of lager; I saw that they were drunk, and I refused to give them any; when they saw that they could not get any beer, the previous witness got up and shut the door again, and put his head on the table as if he was going to sleep; some of my customers complained of this, and I put them out; when I put them out, MCGUIRE put his fist up to me and then went off; that is all I know.

JOSEPH CUSHMAN, M. D., being sworn, said—I have made a post-mortem examination of the body of DENNIS O'BRIEN, at the Morgue, Aug. 22, 1870; on examining the body externally I found a stab-wound in the chest, between the fourth and fifth ribs, one and one-half inches left of the median line of the body; the direction of this wound was downward and inward; on opening the thoracic cavity I found the cartilage of the fourth rib gouged, and the wound to have passed through the pericardium, and through the wall of the right ventricle of the heart, near the septum and midway between the base and apex; the pericardium was distended, with blood serum and fibrine, and surface of heart was covered with recent exudation; both pleural cavities were half full of fluid, and both lungs were œdematous; I also found a slight scalp-wound behind the right ear; all the organs, except the kidneys, which were slightly fatty, were in a healthy condition; death, in my opinion, was caused by hemorrhage into the pericardium and pericarditis, the result of a stab-wound of the chest, perforating the heart.

The jury rendered the following verdict: "That the deceased came to his death at the hands of the prisoner, FRANK F. DAILKER, who evidently considered his life in danger at the time." The Coroner discharged the accused. The Grand Jury will probably take action in the case. Officer FITZPATRICK, of the Tenth Ward, made himself conspicuous during the examination by his pertinacity in interrupting the Coroner and seeking to act as public prosecutor. He will probably be arraigned before the Police Commissioners for his conduct and neglect in not arresting the parties when they began the disturbance.

Reading the War Bulletins—Pickpockets in the Crowd.

JAMES DUNN, THOMAS SMITH and ROBERT STANLEY were arraigned before Justice HOGAN, yesterday, at the Tombs, by Detective FIELD, of the Fourth Ward, on a charge of being pickpockets. The officer stated that he saw the accused on Tuesday evening in Printing-House-square, and that they visited each of the newspaper bulletin-boards where a crowd had collected. The "mob" had pushed through the crowds, and evidently intended to pick pockets. The detective watched them for some time, and finally arrested all three. The prisoners were held for examination by the Magistrate.

MARY FALLON, a sister to "Reddy, the Blacksmith," who keeps the old rum-shop of that Broadway ruffian, made herself conspicuous in the main corridor, by threatening the officers with future vengeance, and it appears that MARY housed the men accused by the Police. The woman, by her loud voice and coarse language, soon attracted a crowd about her, and she was finally compelled to move away. Reddy did not make his appearance.

CRIMES AND CASUALTIES.

Burglary in Eighth-Avenue—An Escaped Convict Captured—Assault With a Razor—Smuggling—Minor Offenses and Accidents.

Between midnight and daylight, yesterday, the tailor-shop of A. SHERWIN, No. 417 Eighth-avenue, was entered by burglars, who gained an entrance through the fan-light over the front door, and succeeded in getting away with $300 worth of goods. During the day, however, Detective MCCONNELL, of the Twentieth Precinct, arrested one CORNELIUS FERGUSON, alias John Daly, a plumber, of No. 472 West Sixteenth-street, who was arrayed in a complete suit of the stolen property, and was also found in possession of a large portion of the plunder. He was arraigned at the Jefferson Market Police Court, and committed to answer.

THOMAS DUFFY, aged thirty-eight years, of No. 518 West Twenty-eighth-street, yesterday fell from a pile of lumber at the foot of West Thirteenth-street, breaking his left leg. He was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital.

JOHN KELLY, alias John Wilson, alias Paddy Barry, an escaped convict, was arrested Tuesday night at the corner of Houston-street and the Bowery by Officers WILD, SHALVEY and JARDINE, of the Seventh Precinct, and was returned to Sing Sing, from whence he escaped on the 18th of October last. He was sentenced April 19, 1869, by Judge BEDFORD, to two years and six months for burglary.

JAMES BROWN, of No. 125 East Thirty-fifth-street, went to No. 67 Mercer-street, at an early hour yesterday morning, to meet an acquaintance, but fell into the company of JULIA HYLAND, a colored woman. Presently missing $12, he accused her of taking it, but she denied it, and a colored man who came in at the moment resented the charge by making a savage attack upon BROWN with a razor, and succeeded in inflicting a severe wound over his left eye. The assailant fled immediately, and has not yet been arrested.

MARY WILSON and MATHEW LARKIN were held to answer at the Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, before Judge SHANDLEY, for stealing $85 from DANIEL SULLIVAN by means of the panel game.

In the United States Court, yesterday, before Commissioner WILLIAMS, VICTOR GODART, of No. 664 Greenwich-street, was charged with smuggling a large quantity of brandy, and having 1,800 unstamped cigars in his possession. Officer APPLEGATE, of the Secret Service, stated that on the 17th inst. he discovered several bottles of brandy concealed behind the counter in the store of the prisoner, and in a closet attached found 1,800 unstamped cigars and another quantity of brandy in bottles. The prisoner said it was brought to his store by a sailor on board a French vessel. The investigation was adjourned to Friday, the prisoner being admitted to bail.

HERMAN ROSENBERG, No. 35 Norfolk-street, was brought before Commissioner WILLIAMS, at the United States Court, yesterday, for manufacturing cigars without a license, and disposing of them without payment of the legal tax. On the application of the prisoner, the case was adjourned to Monday.

JAMES MCKENNA, who is in custody on a charge of stealing a watch worth $10 from HOWARD PHILIPS, No. 310 West Thirty-fifth-street, the particulars of which appeared in yesterday's TIMES, was brought before Judge SHANDLEY, and held in $1,000 bail.

About 2 o'clock yesterday morning FRANCIS REILLY, aged nineteen, JOHN MCCORMACK, eighteen, and JOHN MULLIGAN, nineteen, were discovered in attempting to break into the premises of JOHN BOWNE, No. 166 Third-avenue, with a "jimmy." They were arrested, and on being brought before Alderman WALSH at the Essex Market Police Court, yesterday, were committed for trial at the Court of General Sessions, in default of $1,500 bail.

At the Essex Market Police Court, yesterday, before Alderman WALSH, THOMAS SMITH and JOHN C. SNELL were held for trial for stealing a purse containing $86 from JEREMIAH KING.

In the United States Court, yesterday, Commissioner SHIELDS issued warrants for the arrest of ten lottery-dealers. They will probably be brought before him today, and may be disposed of summarily.

At the Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, before Judge SHANDLEY, JAMES MCGOWAN was held to answer for breaking into the premises of CLARA FINDLEY.

DAVID CAHILL, of No. 21 Roosevelt-street, who stabbed CORNELIUS CROWLEY, of No. 73 Division-street, on the head with a knife, on the 20th inst., was yesterday held for trial and admitted to bail by Justice HOGAN, as it appears the wounds are not dangerous. CAHILL claims that he only interfered to save CROWLEY's wife from his abuse, when the complainant struck him, and forced him to do something to save his life.

The Gold Market.

There was a little flurry in the gold market yesterday, which, though it was of brief duration, enabled some of the operators to make a very handsome profit. The price of gold has been steadily advancing for two days, and about 11 o'clock yesterday morning it reached 117¾, remaining there, however, but a short time. From that point it commenced to decline, and about 1 o'clock, after the sale of Government gold, the price touched 117. There it fell rapidly, and within half an hour was down to 116⅝.

The operators rallied to the sound of the indicators, and a rush was made to the Gold Room, where business was quite lively for a little while. The bidding was very spirited, but the "bull" efforts were in vain. It was said that the market was excited in consequence of the reports of a gold pool being formed to manipulate the price, similar to last September. But prominent operators denied the existence of any such combination, and attributed the rise and subsequent decline to natural causes. The rates for carrying were very low, indeed lower than they have been for some days.

Operators for an advance seem to regard the situation as favorable, and are on the alert for any news which will affect the market, which is just now quite sensitive. It is almost needless to say that the intelligence of a French victory, or of a turn in the tide of affairs on the Continent, would be the best news that the "bulls" could wish for. The German bankers, who have been "bearing" the market almost since the war broke out, are understood to be "short," and the operators who are "long" of gold consider that now is the time for them to go in.

The price of gold went up again after the flurry above noted. The fluctuations of the day will be seen from the following:

10:00	116⅞	12:00	117¾	1:45	116⅞
10:15	117	12:15	117⅝	2:00	117

The Fatal Gas Explosion—A Gas Company Censured.

Coroner ROLLINS held an inquest, yesterday, in the case of WM. MCGRATH, of No. 87 Madison-street, who died from the effects of injuries sustained on the 9th inst., by the explosion of gas in MARK LANIGAN's cellar, at No. 67 James-street. It appeared that the main of the New-York Gas Company had not been removed as desired by LANIGAN, who had given up gas. The gas was constantly leaking and it finally exploded from the light of a lamp. The Gas Company removed the main since the accident, and destroyed the pipe where the leak had been. The jury censured the New-York Gas Company for their neglect, and rendered a verdict of accidental death.

Progress of the Work on the East River Bridge.

Work is slowly but steadily progressing on the East River Bridge, and borings have begun at Pier No. 29, on the New-York side of the river, to reach the rocky foundation on which the western pier of the bridge is to rest. The first boring was made several years ago, when the rock was not reached until they had pierced to the depth of 107 feet, whereas the new shafts, now completed, have reached the rock at a depth of eighty feet. The nature of the soil through which the shafts have been sunk has corresponded entirely with the anticipations of the engineers, and consists of thick black mud, sand and gravel, with occasional bowlders of rock.

Now that the bed rock is reached, the building operations will begin as soon as arrangements can be made with the Ferry Company, who at present occupy the slip. Considerable activity is also displayed upon the Brooklyn side, and two courses of stone have been laid already upon the caisson, each of which is two feet thick. Beneath this increasing weight the caisson is gradually sinking to its destined bed. The heavy stones, some of which are five feet long, three feet wide and two feet thick, are placed in position by means of three high derricks, which are mounted on the top of the caisson, and each derrick is supplied with an engine. In the interior of the caisson the excavation is going on regularly, although not rapidly, inasmuch as there are several large bowlders in the way. These bowlders are removed by a process of drilling holes in the direction in which the workmen desire to split them, and then driving in wedges. At present there are three gangs of men, eighty each in number, at work alternately upon the foundations. The variety of stone which the excavators have met with indicate that their position is the result of drifting, and that they may have been brought together from great distances. The bridge is a work that involves great labor and great outlay, but when it is finished it will amply repay all.

WEDNESDAY, Aug. 24—P. M.

The buyers of Gold were apparently much encouraged by the War situation in the morning papers, and ran the price up from 116⅞, as on Tuesday night, to 117⅝@117¾ ₩ cent. The early Paris telegrams of the forenoon encouraged this confidence in a further rise; but about noon the advices were so contradictory of the reports of last night and this morning, as to drive down the sales to 116⅝ ₩ cent. From this point there was a subsequent recovery to 117⅜ ₩ cent. again, not on fresher news, so much, as upon the suspicion of a strong "pool" or combination in the Gold Room to make the market up. We are usually slow to give credence to such rumors, but the determined appearance of the buying this Afternoon denotes more than ordinary confidence among speculators.

The Exports of Domestic Produce from New-York this week are light, only about three millions in value. The exports of Gold should be correspondingly increased, but these have been anticipated, in a considerable measure, by the heavy shipments which recently followed the declaration of War in Europe. The steamers today carried out only $509,560. We find the Foreign Exchange market lower than yesterday on actual transactions, although several leading houses post their rates ¼@⅜ ₩ cent. above the terms at which first-class Bills on London can be bought for cash. The 60 days' figures are 109½@109⅝ ₩ cent. sales; short sight, 110⅜. Sales and Cable telegrams were at 110¼ ₩ cent. At the same time one or two leading drawers ask 109⅝@109⅞ ₩ cent. for 60 days London.

In regard to the condition of the Money Market, we feel authorized to repeat the suggestion of the last day or two that the apparent ease on call loans to the Brokers is the result of a limited employment on the Stock Exchange rather than superabundant balances in Bank. There is great caution in putting out loans on time, even as short as thirty days, and 7 ₩ cent. is the minimum rate. This difference of two ₩ cent. between loans subject to call, and 30@60 days' time, may be taken as a fair index to the state of feeling at Bank and among private lenders as to the rates of Money later in the season. This preparation for dearer Money, however, may possibly tend to qualify anything like stringency in September or October. It seems reasonably certain that the war on the Continent has called home a certain amount of Foreign balances previously employed in Wall-street, and the circumstance that these have been remitted in Gold does not essentially change the effect upon the market. The disappointment from this state of things to the new Railway undertakings of the country is no doubt serious, but we have reason to hope that most of the projectors and bankers of these works will, at an early day, if they have not already done so, adapt their finances to this suddenly-changed prospect abroad, and moderate the projects of new construction to their ability to raise Money at home accordingly.

The following are the bids and accepted bids for the $1,000,000 offered for account of the Sinking Fund at the Treasury Office at noon today.

On the Stock Exchange the Public Funds were steady at the late prices of Tuesday. The lower figures for 5-20s from London were qualified by the difference in gold here. In the State Bonds (Southern) there was some pressure to sell the new Tennessees at 60½ ₩ cent., and the New and Special Tax North Carolinas were lower. In Railway Bonds there was not much done at the Boards. In the Railway Stocks the market opened weaker in the morning in the Long Room, but at the first regular Board of the Exchange there was a good demand at the decline, and this continued at the Afternoon Board, although the prevailing spirit is dullish and the speculation of a halting or undetermined spirit. The sales were largest of New-York Central Stock and Scrip.

After the late Boards, the following quotations were made as compared with Tuesday night:

There was some talk in banking circles yesterday about a demand threatened to be made by parties here for Gold or Silver on accepted Bills which they hold on Paris, or in case of refusal, of protest and claim for damages. We are under the impression that no such demand will be made. It best not be, on second thought, by any party having mercantile relations with France. Already an American branch banking in Paris has been "warned" in relation to an advertisement that their bills would be paid in Gold or Silver, and the rumor is that our Minister had to settle the trouble. This would seem to be a minor offense to the French Government, compared with the refusal, in the midst of war, to take legal-tender notes for French acceptances falling due, and a claim upon the American drawers, for damages under such circumstances would scarcely be allowed in our Courts—or even if entertained it would compensate the serious responsibility in which the holders of the bills might be involved in Paris.

An incident creditable to the liberality of the New-England Mutual Life Company has come to our knowledge, (not through the office of the Company,) which deserves to be publicly mentioned. A gentleman of this City, formerly in the dry goods trade, had held a life policy for $10,000 for many years from the Company, and when taken suddenly and seriously ill, a few days ago, it was discovered by his friends that from straightened circumstances he had been unable to pay the premium since 1868. The New-York Agent of the Company could do nothing in the premises, but on representing all the circumstances of the case to the head office in Boston, he was promptly instructed by the President to receive the back premiums, about $800, which his friends advanced, and the subject of the policy died the next day, leaving, as the only support of his widow, $10,000.

Attention is called to the fact that the time for the redemption of the outstanding circulating notes of the old incorporated Seventh Ward (State) Bank, the charter of which terminated Jan. 1, 1866, will expire by legal limitation Aug. 30, instant, and that up to that time the notes will be redeemed in gold.

The return from the Bank of England for the week ended the 10th of August gives the following results when compared with the previous week:

The London Times (Money article) of Aug. 13 thus explains the recent arrangements of the French Government with the Bank of France:

"The news from Paris of the suspension of specie payments by the Bank of France, the increase of the war credit from £20,000,000 to £40,000,000, and the granting of a period of grace for the payment of bills and of all other liabilities have constituted the chief topic in the city today.

The authorized issue of the Bank of France under the forced currency, is to be limited to £72,000,000, ($360,000,000,) and, as the amount of notes at present in circulation is £63,340,000, ($316,700,000,) the balance available for increasing the circulation will thus be £8,660,000, ($43,300,000.) The bullion during the past week experienced a further decrease of £2,750,000, ($13,750,000,) making a total reduction of £11,630,000, ($58,150,000,) from the high point attained five weeks ago, and the sum remaining in hand is £41,140,000, ($205,700,000.) Looking at the universal propensity of the French population for hoarding in times of disturbance, and the increasing momentum of the drain from the Bank, the resolution now adopted can hardly be considered premature. The war demand, coupled with that on the part of the people, would, in the course of a few further days, have caused another heavy diminution, and the panic then inevitable would probably have swept away the balance. It is better that it should remain, so far as the exigencies of the war may permit, in the vaults of the bank, to serve as a foundation for a resumption of payments at the proper time, than that it should be dispersed for months or years in hiding-places throughout the country. The effect of the suspension on other countries must be to lessen the demand for specie. France must pay in specie or its equivalent, just as heretofore, for all she requires from foreign nations, but she will want none for home use. Of course gold will rise to a premium there, the extent of which will be regulated partly by the degree to which she may find it necessary to increase her note issues, and partly by the confidence or despondency of the people as to the future course of events. The premium on gold will be the measure of the extra prices the population will have to pay for all imported necessaries, and this, together with the ultimate cost of redeeming whatever excess of paper may be put forth, will operate in mixed ways as so much taxation, present and future. In a crisis, a more universal and searching method could not be resorted to, and its efficiency in carrying countries through the most severe trials and enabling them to raise any amount of loans has been exemplified from the time of our own wars down to that of the recent American struggle. That the limit of £72,000,000 now fixed for the authorized circulation, and which would leave only £8,660,000 for increased wants, will be maintained, is not to be expected, unless the war should be brought suddenly to a close.

The last suspension of payments by the Bank of France occurred on the 15th of March, 1848, just after the dethronement of LOUIS PHILIPPE and the declaration of a Republic. So different was the scale of financial transactions at that period from those of the present day that the amount of notes in circulation was only £11,000,000, while the bullion was only £2,400,000. The amount of extra issue required was then small, as the country was not exposed to war, and there was consequently little or no discount upon it; but a resumption was not effected until the Autumn of 1850, when the note circulation stood at about £20,000,000, a stock of £18,000,000 of bullion had been accumulated.

PETROLEUM—Nearly all the available supply of Crude, in bulk, in this market, is under very strong control, and higher prices are claimed for lots wanted for actual early delivery, with a fair demand reported. The bids are generally on the basis of 13c., while the leading holders are unwilling to sell under 13½c., at about which rate equal to 4,750 bbls. are said to have been placed, chiefly for September delivery. Crude, in shipping order, has been neglected, and nominal, at about 15½c.@16½c., ₩ gallon. At the Creek, a fairly active business has been reported since our last, embracing equal to about 25,000 bbls., part for September delivery, and part remainder of the year, on the basis of $3 10 on the Upper, and $3 20 on the Lower Roads, ₩ bbl. Refined Oil has been unusually tame. Shippers have been unwilling to buy freely at prevailing prices, in view of the less explicit war reports. There has been very little of a speculative call noted. The offerings have been moderate. Prices have favored purchasers slightly. Sales have been reported here of only 700 bbls. Standard White at 26c.; and 1,000 bbls. do., September to November, at about 26¼c., ₩ gallon. Also at Philadelphia, 1,000 bbls. Standard White, for early delivery, at 24¼c. ₩ gallon, which rate was about the current asking price for the remainder of the year, with 24c. reported bid. There were 25 bbls. Crude and 1,211 bbls. Refined received at Philadelphia. The export clearances of Refined hence have been 1,284 bbls. for Bilboa, and 3,896 cases for Naples. Refined Oil, in cases, has been in fair request within a range of from 30c.@31½c., as extremes, ₩ gallon; sales, 11,000 cases. Naphtha has been in moderate demand at 9½c.@10c., in shipping order, with sales reported of 500 bbls., at 14c. in cases, with sales of 1,000 cases, and 8c.@8½c., in bulk, ₩ gallon.

PROVISIONS—Mess Pork has been more freely dealt in, but at a further reduction in prices. Prime Mess has been sought after to a fair extent, exclusively for export, at extreme rates. In most other kinds business has been very quiet. Sales have been reported since our last of 1,300 bbls., in lots, at $29@$29 25, chiefly at $29@$29 12½, for Western Mess; $20@$22 for Prime Mess; $24@$26 50 for Prime and Extra Prime; $28 25@$28 37½ for Thin Mess; $28 50@$29 for City Mess, ₩ bbl. Also 250 bbls. Western Mess, seller September, at $29 ₩ bbl. Cut-meats have been in moderate demand at about former prices. Sales have been reported of equal to 100 pkgs. at 12¾c.@13¼c. for Shoulders; 19½c.@22½c. for Pickled and Smoked Western and City Hams, ₩ lb. Bacon has been in rather better request at about 15½c.@16½c. for City-cured Long Clear and Long Cut Middles, ₩ lb.; sales 200 boxes. Lard has been in moderate request at rather firmer prices. Sales have been reported since our last of 470 tcs. and bbls. at 15c.@17½c. for poor No. 1 to very choice Kettle-rendered, chiefly at 16½c.@16¾c. for City, and 16¾c.@16½c. for fair to choice Western Steam, ₩ lb.; also, 500 tcs. prime Steam for forward delivery, including September, on private terms; and December at 14½c. ₩ lb. Beef continues quiet at unaltered rates; sales have been reported of 110 bbls., in lots, at $12@$16 for Plain Mess; $16@$19 50 for Extra Mess, ₩ bbl. Tierced Beef has been more active at $27@$30 for Prime Mess; $30@$33 for India Mess, ₩ tierce. Sales, 1,500 tcs. for export. Beef Hams continue inactive at from $26@$30 for old Southern and Western, and $40@$42 for new Ice-cured Western, ₩ bbl. Butter continues in moderate demand at former rates. We quote: State, inferior to fancy, 15c.@45c., and Western, inferior to fancy, at 15c.@45c.; the day's receipts were 1,602 pkgs. Cheese continues inactive at from 4c.@13½c. as the extreme for very common to fine factory; the day's receipts have been 4,114 boxes.

SUGARS—Raw have been in improved request, chiefly for refining purposes, at a shade better prices, closing firmly. Sales have been reported since our last of 3,150 hhds. Cuba and Porto Rico at from 9c.@10⅜c., chiefly at 9⅜c.@9¾c., and 1,300 boxes Havana, part at 9⅜c.@10c. ₩ lb. The stock of Raw Sugars in first hands this morning was estimated at 96,080 hhds., 114,294 boxes, and 205,311 bags, at 11¼c. ₩ lb. We quote: Refining grades Cuba at 9⅜c.@9⅞c.; fair to good Grocery grades, 9⅞c.@10⅛c.; good to choice Grocery grades, 10¼c.@10⅝c.; Porto Rico grocery grades range from 9⅞c.@11½c.; No. 12 Box Sugar, 10⅞c. ₩ lb. Refined Sugars continue in fair demand at 11½c.@11¾c.@12⅛c., as extremes.

TALLOW, &c.—Tallow has been more active at former rates; sales have been reported of 265,000 lbs., at 9c.@9⅛c., for inferior to prime; 45,000 lbs. Stearine at 14½c.@15½c.; 25,000 lbs. Grease at 6⅛c.@14c. ₩ lb.

WHISKY—Has been depressed and lower; sales 400 bbls., in wood and iron-bound pkgs., at 98c.@94c., chiefly 98c., ₩ gallon. Receipts, 656 bbls.

FREIGHTS—There has been rather more call for Flour and grain room for British ports, while less inquiry has been noted for Petroleum vessels. Rates have been irregular—in the instance of Wheat, by steam, for Liverpool, firmer. In other lines, the engagements were on a restricted scale. For Liverpool, there were taken 150 bales Cotton, by steam, at ½d. ₩ lb.; 5,200 bbls. Flour at 1s. 6d. ₩ bbl.; 70,000 bushels Wheat at 5d.@5½d., chiefly at 5¼d. ₩ bushel; 3,000 boxes Cheese, part at 35s.; 120 hhds. Tallow at 23s. 6d.; 85 boxes Bacon at 25s.; and, by sail, 150 tons oil-cake at 15s. ₩ ton. For London, 5,000 bbls. Flour at 2s. 7½d. ₩ bbl.; 500 bbls. Rosin at 2s. 9d. ₩ 280 lbs. For Gibraltar and orders, an Italian bark with 11,000 cases Petroleum at 27c.@28c., gold. For Gibraltar and Malta, an Austrian brig with Tobacco, at about $11, gold. From Pensacola, Fla., an American bark with 230,000 feet Lumber, for Philadelphia or New-York, at $10 ₩ 1,000.

WHOLESALE PRODUCE MARKET.

Prices current for Wednesday, Aug. 24, reported expressly for the NEW-YORK TIMES by STARIN & FLOYD, Produce and Commission Merchants, No. 209 Duane-street. Our quotations are the wholesale prices paid by dealers and jobbers for sound, merchantable property, in good clean packages.

BUTTER—The total receipts of Butter for the week ending this day are 8,490 pkgs., which are so light that, in ordinary seasons, would have advanced rates, but in favor of the trade has dragged heavily throughout the week for all classes of stock, and prices have barely been maintained. The sentiment of consumers of produce this season is strongly determined at comparatively low prices, and high prices for any commodity will be with great difficulty effected, even with cause. Therefore, with our abundant crop of every product, including Butter and Cheese, speculators for a rise will probably find their vocation at least unremunerative during the present season. There is very little movement to the market at the close of the week's trade, and our quotations are unchanged but nominal.

CHEESE—The week just closed has been remarkable in the Cheese trade for the light receipts and small volume of business at this period of the season, the total receipts for the week being 35,752 boxes. The bulk of buyers for export have so far shown but little disposition to continue their operations, even at the decline, and trade has been principally confined to local and coastwise demand, which has shown some improvement. At the close of the week's trade there is some inquiry for export for fancy stock, but 13½c. being the extreme current rate, and that exceptional. We quote:

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR.

Our Paris correspondent today indicates a complication which may compel Russia to take part in the war. The Poles are represented as in earnest sympathy with France and leaving to join the French Army, while the Baltic Provinces are said to desire annexation to the North German Confederation. Private letters from Paris received in London, represent that the Prussians hope for an insurrection in Paris when they approach it, which will result in displacing the existing authorities, when peace may be easily guaranteed. The war will be purposeless in their estimation without this. On the other hand La Presse says the neutral Ambassadors have been officially informed that peace is impossible while a single Prussian soldier remains in France. Several conferences have been held by diplomatic agents in Paris, but a special dispatch from that city says no mention was made of peace overtures such as the English journals reported. BISMARCK has indirectly informed the French Minister of Foreign Affairs that Prussia will only conclude peace on a basis which will make it impossible for France to think of future disturbances. Advices from Berlin say a popular movement is in progress to secure for the Liberal Party a voice in the settlement of terms of peace, and to give expression to the feeling of the people, to whom everything is due.

The session of the Corps Legislatif on Monday night was unusually turbulent. The replies of the Ministers, though generally satisfactory, did not allay the excitement. One member proposed to send everybody out of the city who could not bear arms; another suggested sending the wounded away; another created a fresh tumult by declaring that there was a scarcity of arms in one quarter of the city, and M. GAMBETTA brought matters to a crisis by accusing the majority of having brought on the war. The party accused would not listen to him, and the session was brought to a close amid confusion and disorder. The Constitutionnel vaguely intimates that the Prussians will find that Paris, as ever, is the heart of France, and that neither spies nor battalions can break the defenses which her danger has cemented. The Figaro has made a proposition to place electrical lights on the ramparts of Paris to dazzle the eyes of the besiegers in the event of an attack, and the suggestion is said to be regarded with favor. The Garde Mobile and sharp-shooters encamped about Paris are drilled by competent officers. The incorporation of the National Guard with the regular army has begun. Advices from French sources say that Marshal BAZAINE had arrested the Prussian advance until the organization of a large army under MCMAHON was completed. La Liberté says the Crown Prince has fallen back from St. Dizier. The same journal gives the loss of the three Prussian Armies as 35,000 killed and 85,000 wounded. Dispatches by way of London represent Metz entirely isolated, FAILLY superseded at Chalons, and MCMAHON strongly posted on the plains before that city with an army of 175,000. A lady of high social position in Paris has been arrested on accusation of conveying information to the enemy, and is imprisoned in the fortress of Vincennes. The amount of the loan taken on Tuesday was 630,000,000 francs, and at the close of the lists five thousand persons were waiting to subscribe, and this did not include the subscriptions from Marseilles, Bordeaux and other cities. The loan is quoted at the same rate as rentes.

Violations of Belgian territory by the Prussians are reported from Arlon, a frontier town of Belgium, where Belgian soldiers were fired upon by Prussian troops, who entered both Belgium and Luxembourg, and, it is said, transported their wounded through neutral territory. A Belgian journal says the Belgian soldiers were mistaken for French, and the trespass was inadvertent, as the Prussians withdrew as soon as told of their position. The Orleanist Princes in England are represented to be very hopeful and watchful of events in France, all of which, affecting their interests, are reported to them by a faithful agent in Paris. A subsidy of $10,000,000 in gold has been paid by Prussia to Bavaria. Count REHARD has been appointed by the Prussian Government Governor of Alsace.

The War.

The news received from the seat of war during the past twenty-four hours has been rather more contradictory than ever, and it would not be easy at this moment for the most careful student of the situation to decide positively where the principal contending armies are placed. There are as many rumors on the subject as prevailed lately in reference to the whereabouts of the Emperor and the Prince Imperial. It is not difficult to concoct positive statements, and pretend that they come from "Head-quarters," but the public here will act wisely in receiving all such statements with great suspicion. So close a watch is kept upon the sources through which real news could alone arrive, that it is almost impossible for the most active of correspondents to transmit anything more than mere gossip. BAZAINE'S plans are kept a secret even from the French Chambers, but we know from M. F. GAILLARDET, whose dispatches to the Courrier des Etats Unis have a special value, that the General has begged the Government to send him "reinforcements upon reinforcements." M. GAILLARDET, however, tells us that the conscripts now marching through Paris are armed only with the old muzzle-loader, and are without uniforms—a striking proof of the rottenness which has prevailed in the administration of the French Army. It is all but impossible that raw levies armed with muzzle-loaders can cope successfully with the well-trained soldiers of Germany, carrying the needle-gun. This disadvantage on the side of the French will not be without results in future engagements.

The patriotic spirit of the two nations is fully aroused, but we have still this important fact before us—that on the first of every month, and oftener if necessary, very heavy bodies of disciplined troops are dispatched to the aid of the Prussian commanders, while France can only summon into the field raw youths from the rural districts. It may be said that we found soldiers created under similar circumstances very effective during our own recent war, but in that respect the conditions were equal on both sides. In the present contest the chief conditions of success are nearly all on one side. We have never doubted that the French people would make a gallant resistance, rejecting the predictions of many that the war would "be over in a week." But it is quite clear that the French Army was not in a fit state to be put in the field against the immense hosts of Germany. Marshal BAZAINE has been called upon to accomplish an almost superhuman task, and if success crowned his efforts he would be justly entitled to rank among the most distinguished commanders of this or any other age.

As a fresh evidence of the fact that this is a war of the people in France, and not of their ruler only, our readers will observe that six hundred and twenty millions of the new loan were subscribed for in one day, and that, when the lists closed at night, about five thousand persons who were waiting to subscribe were turned away. The loan is now quoted at the same price as rentes. It may be reasonably doubted whether the population would come forward with their money in this way if they did not feel considerable interest in the war, totally apart from the Emperor NAPOLEON—who, indeed, has been little more than a puppet all the way through. His name is scarcely ever mentioned in Paris, but still the war goes on. If the very positive statements made by the "only journal" in America which has special correspondents at the seat of war had any foundation in fact, peace would have been made three weeks ago—for NAPOLEON has been quite powerless to direct events. If the French people were adverse to the war they could soon stop it. Only wonderful ignorance or extreme fanaticism could suggest the notion that the French nation is being led by the nose by an Emperor who seems to be absolutely forgotten in his own capital. This is a war of France against Germany, not of NAPOLEON against King WILLIAM or King BISMARCK. If we have not been among the prophets who foretold an early termination of the struggle, it is because history teaches that wars between great nations are generally obstinate and protracted. This is a question which cannot be settled by the "sympathies" which are attracted to either side in the contest, nor by the prophets who derive their inspirations from the Red Republican circles of Paris and the refugee conclaves of London. The course of events will alone decide whether France can be crushed in a single campaign. And this may be said, it is to be hoped, without doing violence to the feelings of the Germans, who have the majority of the American people on their side.

A Republic for Germany.

The successes of the German armies in the present war may undoubtedly tend to increase the popularity of the House of HOHENZOLLERN for a time; but there can scarcely be any doubt that a republic, and not an empire, is the form of government toward which the people are gravitating. It is impossible that united Germany can long remain subject to a monarch who still clings to the principle which cost CHARLES I. his life. The German people are now too powerful to be held in leading-strings, and the degree of culture which exists among them is too high to admit of a repetition of those despotic measures which Count BISMARCK has so often put in force. Count BISMARCK has, indeed, been made an instrument for the accomplishment of a great work, but his usefulness will have passed away with the close of the present war. From that time the German people will have freed themselves from external enemies, and they will be enabled to apply their undivided energies to the task of constructing a Government calculated to develop the liberal ideas which really animate the nation. The war has not only paralyzed the only formidable foe which stood in the way of Germany, but it has obliterated sectional differences. The grand idea of "unity" was never so fully realized by our own people as during and after our late war, and the sense of danger to Germany has had a similar effect upon the minds of the German people. They see plainly enough that their own political differences are unimportant compared with the necessity of presenting an unbroken front to the world. They will soon see that in a republic lies their surest guarantee of future prosperity and power, and it is not too much to hope that Austria will one day form an integral part of that republic.

In that case, the two greatest Governments in the world will challenge admiration as the direct work of the people's hands. Under a republic, there need be scarcely any limit to the progress of Germany. No one can doubt that she would at any time be prepared to repel assaults from without. Republics always know how to defend themselves. The existence of the House of HOHENZOLLERN is now an anachronism. It is the indomitable spirit of a great nation which has waged the present arduous contest, not the genius of a King or his advisers. Whatever may be the plans of BISMARCK, we do not believe that the German people intend this war to be one of aggrandizement or spoliation. They only want "Germany for the Germans,"—to cause it to be understood by the world, once for all, that Germany must not be put up as a prize for Imperial or political gamblers. BISMARCK'S ambition has thus far exceeded that of his countrymen, and the war will probably teach him that with the accomplishment of German unity, the great bulk of the people will be fully satisfied. As a Minister, he is still far from being universally popular—as the fact that he has been obliged to suppress sixty-seven newspapers in North Germany, for making disagreeable comments, sufficiently attests. "I have no love for the preaching old drill-sergeant who is called King of Prussia," writes a German to a foreign journal, "or for the audacious conspirator who pulls his wires. This conspirator and his rival conspirator, LOUIS BONAPARTE, stand in my affections pretty much on a par. Both play their own game, and are obstacles to better things. I am a republican. I desire a republic for every country in Europe. I believe no country of Europe is so fitted to be a republic as Germany." That is the true idea, and it will govern the future of politics in Germany. Under a republic, the nation itself, and not Kings or Ministers, would reap the advantages of the vast sacrifices it has made. Let us hope that the present generation will witness the displacement both of the HOHENZOLLERNS and the HAPSBURGS.

The Rival Senators.

Republican politicians are actively canvassing for the choice of delegates to the approaching State Convention, and for the nominations for members of Congress in the various districts. We learn that throughout the State the struggle between the Fenton and Conkling factions of the party is going on with constantly increasing vigor, and that the prospect is that some unpleasant manifestations of feeling will be made at Saratoga on the 7th of September. It is useless to attempt to disguise the fact that this unfortunate condition of affairs exists. It is far better to recognise the evil, and endeavor to remedy, or at least to mitigate it.

It is peculiarly unfortunate that the Republicans of New-York are not more harmonious just at present, and that the leaders should be engaged in a bitter feud at a time when the party needs its best energies to avert a new defeat. The question is earnestly asked on all hands, What is the most feasible remedy for the evil, and how can it be best applied? The situation is not a new one. A similar condition of affairs has existed in the State of New-York for nearly thirty years, having been inaugurated by Mr. SEWARD, and participated in by Mr. FILLMORE, Mr. WEED, Mr. GREELEY, and, in fact, by all the prominent Whig and Republican leaders. The Democrats have several times been successful in the State, solely by reason of the dissensions which have raged in the Republican ranks, and on each occasion the bitterness of feeling has been intensified, and the blame of the disaster ascribed by one faction to the other.

Senators FENTON and CONKLING seem to have fallen heirs to the old feud, and to have incorporated into it an unusual amount of personal acrimony. In almost every county in the State their respective adherents are at work, securing delegates to the approaching State Convention, and manipulating the local nominations. In all probability the Convention will be composed entirely of delegates pledged to the interests of one or other of our Senators. Whichever secures control will be sure to use it to the dissatisfaction of the other, thus continually keeping alive old bitterness of feeling, and widening the breach between the adherents of each side. It is not to be supposed that an effective campaign can be carried on under such circumstances, nor that a strong ticket, which the whole party would earnestly support, can be nominated.

The only effective way of reaching the difficulty is by a change of course on the part of the Senators at the head of the respective factions. They must be induced, if possible, to reconcile their differences, and call off their forces. This must be done in the interests of the national Republican Party, as well as in their individual interests, for it is certain that our Senators would serve themselves in the estimation of the Republicans of the State by making concessions to each other, or even by a temporary sacrifice of pride. The rank and file of the party are heartily tired of the contest, and would rejoice to witness a compromise and reconciliation.

Practically, there need be no difficulty in effecting such an arrangement, although we fear there is very little hope that it will be done. The controversy is too extended, and has become complicated with too many local strifes. In nearly a dozen districts fierce struggles are going on for the Congressional nominations, and much bitterness of feeling has been engendered. In the Chautauqua, Erie, Wyoming, Orleans, Oswego and Onondaga districts, especially, is this the case, and we are bound to assume that such a condition of things will mar the harmony of the canvass in those counties. They are all Republican strongholds, and the danger is that our customary majorities may be so far reduced as to swell up another discouraging majority against us in the State.

We appeal to our Senators to "let us have peace." So far as their personal grievances are concerned, the party cares but very little, and invokes a plague "on both their Houses." We suggest that they get together before the State Convention, and come to an amicable understanding with regard to the future. We are aware that both of them constantly profess a disposition for harmony, but we know that the war of the factions is as constantly going on, and that the Republican Party is in a fair way to suffer defeat in consequence. If a sincere and permanent adjustment of the existing difficulties could be made, and publicly announced at Saratoga on the 7th, it is quite certain, that the party would be in a far better condition to go into the approaching campaign than it can be under present circumstances.

Demagogues and Working Men.

The conflict between capital and labor is in Europe a great fact. One is the despotic and irresponsible master—the other the fettered servant, almost the slave. Progress in mechanical invention and scientific appliances tends mainly to the advantage of the employer—little, if at all, to the benefit of the employed. The measure of wealth is the measure of political power. There, then, the disposition of labor organizations to take part in political movements is not surprising. The wisdom of the policy which seeks relief for working men through organic changes in the Government, or through ordinary legislative action, is doubtful even there. It is natural that attempts should be made to secure for combinations in the interest of labor the same legal recognition that has always been enjoyed by associated capital, but beyond this mere political action seems unavailing. The Rochdale co-operators have done more for English working men than the Chartists ever did, or than common trades-unions and the advocates of strikes can ever hope to do.

But the conflict, which possesses terrible significance in the crowded countries of the Old World, has no existence on this continent. Socialistic theorists profess to find in American society the germs of a struggle as intense as that which underlies the surface of things in England and France. Practical people know that the assertion has no solid foundation. No impassable chasm separates industry from wealth. We have no privileged class, and no class doomed hopelessly to labor. The capitalist of today was a working man ten years ago; hard work, and skill, and thrift, and judgment have made him what he is. And the road he trod to fortune is open to the whole body of working men. They cannot truly complain of arbitrary distinctions, of obstacles proceeding from political causes, or of class injustice. Their numbers invest them with vast political influence, and party leaders eagerly bid for their support. They are strangers to the invidious legislation, and the insulting privileges, from which industry elsewhere suffers. Land is accessible to all of them, and the ceaseless march of settlement makes the West a never-failing resource. When, therefore, a man mounts a platform, and harangues them as an oppressed and injured class, we may be quite sure he is a demagogue. When he invites them to organize for political action, apart from other classes, we suspect that he plies the demagogue's art for some sinister purpose. When he assails capital as an enemy, and appeals to labor as proletarian—as a destined order or estate from which there is no escape—and propounds schemes at variance with the general welfare, we more than suspect both his character and purposes.

For these reasons the Labor Convention, which has been some days in session at Cincinnati, seems to us wholly unworthy of respect. Its speeches and resolutions savor more of demagogism than of genuine honest industry. We listen for an intelligent exposition of the real grievances and drawbacks which affect labor, and of practical methods of enlarging its rewards and promoting its elevation; and we hear, instead, senseless wails about the tyranny of capital, and equally senseless suggestions with reference to the improvement of the working man. It might be expected that in such a body, competent witnesses would proclaim the lamentable lack of thoroughness in mechanical work in this country, and explain its causes—the rapid decline in skill consequent upon the breaking down of the apprenticeship system,—the self-imposed severity of competition arising from the tendency of labor to aggregate in cities,—the costliness and futility of strikes as means of improvement,—and the practical working of co-operation here and abroad, as an agency for securing to labor a larger measure of reward. We might expect, too, to see the brains of the Convention exercised in organizing plans of self-help, whether relating to co-operative industry, or the transport of surplus industry from the crowded centres of trade and commerce to the newer fields of the South and West. On all these subjects a Labor Convention, which really represented labor, and was intent upon benefiting it, should speak authoritatively. On all of them the Cincinnati Convention has been silent.

And for these practical questions what has been substituted? Vehement denunciations of Chinese immigrants, who are to be suppressed by the bullet, if the ballot fail. Demands for a national Eight-hour law. Violent attacks upon the bondholders and the national banks, and a proposition to pay the bonds in an inconvertible currency, to be manufactured without limits. Discriminating taxes upon wealth. Legislative reduction of rates of interest. Compulsory labor by all able-bodied men. These will serve as specimens of the topics which occupied the time of the speakers, and formed the burden of the resolutions of a body pretending to represent working men. We cannot wonder that an assembly which thus contributed to the demagogues' available capital finished its folly by resolving to inaugurate "a new and distinctive political party." That is the proper finishing stroke of the business. It dispels lingering doubts as to the composition and merit and purpose of this so-called Labor Convention. A little dexterous management might have concealed its character. The mission of its managers is now known, and prudent, self-reliant working men will shun these managers as charlatans.

Suburban Railroads and Civic Politics.

The Elevated Railway in Ninth-avenue has at last ended its precarious existence. The amusement of running empty cars up and down the road, while it gratified the pride of the inventors, and excited a gentle interest in the minds of the general public, was apparently too expensive to the stockholders to be longer indulged in. The road has died from want of confidence. Its appearance was against it, to begin with, and the one or two serious accidents, and the many annoying stoppages which occurred during its brief career, were not reassuring. So the company has discontinued its operations indefinitely, and the project we may fairly regard as dead. The dwellers along the route of the road rejoice once more in a privacy undisturbed by the prying eyes of its passengers, and its mysterious apparatus of clattering chains and incomprehensible wheels no longer brings terror to passing horses, or profane indignation to the hearts of their drivers. Only the road itself remains, growing rustier and forlorner day by day, a melancholy monument of ill-digested schemes and unwise ambition. The only present resource for the company seems to be to let it out for awning-posts, or sell it for old iron.

With the failure of this plan, perishes the last immediate hope of relief to up-town and Westchester residents from the tedium of horse-car and omnibus. An under-ground railroad, even if the design worries its way to an actual beginning, through the manifold obstacles of legislation, intrigue, inertness, and corruption, must necessarily be a work of infinite difficulty, of great time, labor, and expense. The plan we advocated not long since of water-front railways, to be included in the proposed new system of wharfage, seems to offer the speediest possibility of aid. We presume that Gen. MCCLELLAN and his assistants are losing no time in making the preliminary surveys for this pressing and important work, and we trust that the benefits of such a combination as we have referred to will not be lost sight of.

Certainly the last census shows that something must be done in this direction, and very quickly, too, if we desire to retain our numerical superiority as the first City of the continent. While all our neighboring cities—Brooklyn, Jersey City, and Newark—have increased largely in population since the last census, New-York, despite its large immigration, and the natural influx to a Metropolis, has stood still, if it has not fallen actually behind. And these additions to neighboring communities have not resulted only or even chiefly from natural laws of increase, but are largely due to the secession of our own citizens, dissatisfied with our facilities for local transportation. The upper part of Manhattan Island, as lovely a site for private residences as could be desired, is practically barred to all but persons of wealth and leisure by its difficulty of access from the business parts of the City. The dweller in Newark, or Elizabeth, or Rahway, or Stamford, or Bridgeport, not to speak of Brooklyn, can get to his office in Wall-street, or Broadway, or the Swamp, with incomparably more speed, ease, and certainty, the whole year through, than the dweller at Manhattanville or Washington Heights. This has been shown over and over again, not only by figures, but, what is vastly more convincing, by experience; and as a natural consequence, thousands of our best citizens are yearly driven away from us to lend their intelligence and their integrity to the work of building up other cities and other States. To our municipal rulers this may seem of no great moment; but it must not be forgotten that the seceders take away votes with them also. This is a more serious drain than any defection of mere talent or natural strength; and though the facilities for manufacturing public opinion are here unusually great, there must always be a probable basis of fact to sustain the fictions of our canvassers. We trust, therefore, that our next Legislature will graciously remember that what has heretofore been considered only as a social want, may, in time, assume the aspect of a political necessity, and so devise some plan to avert from us the danger of gradual extinction. Else some day or other, in years to come, an intelligent New-Jerseyman may have occasion to sit, like MACAULAY'S famous New-Zealander, around the ruins of our New Court-house, and muse on the downfall of a city destroyed by the absence of facilities for quick transportation.

Return of the Catholic Bishops.

Most of the American Roman Catholic Bishops have now returned from Rome, and have undertaken to offer the public explanations of the infallibility dogma. According to the reports of their addresses, there is a singular diversity of opinion among them, as well as a very conflicting estimate of the importance of the dogma itself. Archbishop PURCELL, of Cincinnati, was one of the boldest of our American prelates in his opposition to the dogma while at Rome, and it seems that his views have not been essentially changed by the fact that the Pope had his own way in the end. In a recent address, delivered at Cincinnati, he declared that the Pope speaks infallibly only when he speaks the truth, and that if he should deny any doctrine of the Church, he would become a heretic, the same as the most fallible man. "Therefore," the Archbishop declares, "if he denies any dogma of the Church held by every true believer, he is no more Pope than either you or I, and so in this respect this dogma of infallibility amounts to nothing as an article of temporal government or cover for heresy."

This is rather bold language for a Roman Catholic prelate to utter, but we have no doubt that it will meet the approbation of the great majority of intelligent Catholics in this country. The fact is that the infallibility question is one which has chiefly interested the clergy; the masses took very little interest in it. When our American Bishops have done explaining it, the world will go on just as if the Pope were as liable to make gross blunders as the New-York Tribune itself.

We publish today several letters from our special correspondents at the seat of war. The statements which are made in these letters may be trusted, since our correspondents are not instructed to garble their news, nor are their letters "doctored" before publication to suit the prejudices of a clique. The writers are simply told to report faithfully what they see and hear. One of these letters is from a Prussian officer, and another is from an officer who writes to us to say that he has received a special pass from Royal head-quarters. "It gives authority to the bearer to 'circulate within the lines of our armies,' and 'our commanders are desired to place no obstacles in his way.'" "Monadnock," whose letters we shall receive from time to time, is too well known to our readers to need any introduction.

Certain Democratic journals have already taken the alarm about the probable results of the New-York census. In this City the party has for a long series of years exhibited a consistent abhorrence of correct enumeration, and it is perhaps only natural that the unbiased figures of our present census should be denounced in advance as a "Radical swindle." If the numbering of the people had produced the effect upon King David which the process appears to produce upon some of our local Democrats, there would have been little need of a Divine interposition to humble the pride which it unduly excited. That the probable total of our City population should be proved to be only 850,000 is, it appears, "a monstrous wrong," "a deep-laid plot," and ought to be immediately remedied by the State Legislature. The same authority believes that a "fair count" would show that there are nearly, if not altogether, a million and a half of souls in our Metropolis. A count conducted on the same principles as those which have "footed up" some late Democratic majorities certainly would.

A growing preference for registered bonds, which our Washington correspondent speaks of as the result of Treasury experience, will no doubt soon extend to other securities besides those of the Government. Some of the railroad companies now recognise the dictates of prudence, in which the preference originates, by providing for the registration of their mortgage bonds,—and the example must be generally followed. There are inconveniences connected with the collection of interest on registered as compared with coupon bonds, as a difference in price has generally shown. But the absolute safety which registration insures outweighs other considerations. A little trouble on dividend-day is compensated for by the guarantee against loss by accident or robbery which the holder of a registered bond possesses.

The verdict of the Brooklyn Coroner's Jury on the Norwalk disaster is of a kind to satisfy no one. The friends of those who fell victims to an accident which could not have occurred apart from gross negligence, had a right to demand that the responsibility should be brought home to the proper persons, and the general public were equally entitled to look for a vindication of their right to be protected against recklessness or incapacity. The jury ought to have determined from the evidence whether the master of the schooner or of the steamer was to be charged with causing the death in question. As it is, the conclusion seems irresistible that neither Coroner nor jury understood their duty. If, as reported, the jury were incapable of agreeing on the question of culpability, they should have declined to find a verdict at all, just as the Coroner ought to have refused to receive the perfectly irrelevant verdict which they did bring in. The public safety is very inadequately cared for when some one who ought to have been tried for a criminal offense gets quietly absolved, and is allowed the opportunity of repeating it.

Nothing could be more calculated to shake our faith in the fitness of France for self-government than the character of the late debates in the Corps Legislatif. Recriminations like those so freely bandied about by the Republican Deputies only tend to show that the minority are more devoted to their party than to their country. In a supreme crisis like the present, true statesmanship and patriotism alike demand that minor differences should be forgotten, and that a support without grudge or cavil should be accorded to the men in whose hands the destinies of the country have been placed. The enemy, who may soon be at the gates, reckons upon dissensions within the city more than upon his engines of destruction.

The officials of the Brooklyn Navy-yard seem to be as much afraid of reporters as the French Generals, and the members of the Press naturally take a somewhat similar way of obtaining their revenge. On Tuesday evening, a fire attended with very slight loss, occurred in one of the floors of a workshop in the Navy-yard. As information regarding the nature and extent was refused both to the local Fire Marshal and to the reporters, the amount of loss was left entirely to the imagination of the latter authorities. It appears to have been unanimously resolved to make a generous allowance for contingencies, since the estimate varied from $100,000 to $200,000.

The opening of the railroad from St. Paul to Lake Superior bids fair to create a new channel of commerce, and to afford a new outlet by the lakes for the grain of Northern Minnesota. Ultimately the Northern Pacific Road will do the same work for the Red River Country, but for many years to come no great expectations can be formed of extensive agricultural productions in the region around the head of Lake Superior. The land is thickly covered with pine, and will compete but slowly with the richer savannahs of the West. For the present, the new Eldorado, Duluth, will be chiefly notable for city lots, merchandise, and commerce.

The fatal accident on the Long Island Railroad, on Tuesday, affords another illustration of the carelessness practiced in regard to dangerous crossings. Here was a point on the line known to be very hazardous. The approach to the track is by an incline, which meets the road just where there is a deep cutting. In addition to this, there is a curve in the line which prevents the approach of a train being seen until it is close at hand. Why, at such a deadly trap as this, are not precautions taken to render accidents impossible? We suppose that railroad authorities will say that people must take care of themselves, and that an occasional sign-post warning them to "look out for the locomotive" ought to be sufficient. It is almost a pity that the managers are not among the sufferers by their own neglect of reasonable precautions.

THE LIBERAL CLUB.

Interesting Paper on the Fauna on the Bottom of the Sea by Dr. Ott.

The Liberal Club held its regular weekly meeting last evening at No. 23 Third-avenue, President WEHLE in the chair. After the reading and approval of the minutes of the former meeting Dr. OTT was introduced, and read an elaborate paper on "The Fauna on the bottom of the sea." The investigations, he said, in the depths of the sea, which at present absorb so deeply the interest of men of science as well as of laymen, are not of the generally-supposed recent origin. Although such researches had been prosecuted during thirty years, not without results, yet the study had recently acquired renewed interest, because recent discoveries have thrown some new light on the origin of our globe. The doctor then reviewed the explorations of FORBES and others in this branch of science, who argued that, because at an increasing depth of the sea animal life decreased, therefore there must be a certain depth at which it ceased to exist. He, the doctor, contended that, as with animals so with vegetable life, both existed and flourished at any depth not below freezing point; and that there are living beings to be found at every accessible depth. The soundings made for the laying of the Atlantic Cable disclosed the existence of living beings at a depth of 2,500 fathoms. On the Norwegian coast well-developed animals were found at a depth of 1,000 fathoms. It was still supposed that the chalk formations were going on in the bottom of the ocean, and inasmuch as the Atlantic Ocean has spread its width on the globe since the chalk formation began, it might be assumed that such chalk formations have never been interrupted since their beginning. MOLNE EDWARDS having examined a fragment of cable found at the bottom of the Mediterranean, between Sardinia and Algiers, at a depth of 3,000 miles, discovered that it was overgrown with shells, worms, &c., and coral. The great tenacity of the mud adhering to the drag-nets had long ago attracted the attention of men of science, and it was ascertained that this property was to be ascribed to the admixture of a jelly-like substance to the fine-grained dirt, which, on examination, were found to contain substances of organic life. This organism was particularly interesting on account of its relation to the animal life in the depths, and to the cretaceous formation. It was known that animals are found at a great depth, and they cannot exist without vegetable matter, the office of the latter being to convert certain organic matter into certain organic compounds. In the facts which these organisms furnish us, he concluded, Prof. DUNCAN had not found any which would require the hypothesis of the permanence of the chalk formations on the bottom of the sea, as far as the animal world is concerned. As yet this hypothesis can only be applied upon the formation of the rock, in which today animal remains are buried, differing widely from those inclosed in the chalk formation. However, it is still possible that, by a continued searching among animals which were considered extinct, a fauna similar to that of the chalk formation will be brought to light, but as yet only the photographic but not the paleontologic continuance of this formation can be admitted.

Dr. OTT illustrated his subject with maps, showing the formation of the fauna and its resemblance to shell-fish and other species of animal common to the sea. The subject was further discussed by Dr. VANDERWEYDE, Prof. ELLBERG and others, after which the meeting adjourned.

POLITICAL.

A SUSPICIOUS MOVEMENT.

The Primary Meetings—Proposition of the Executive Committee of the General City Republican Committee.

On Tuesday evening, the Executive Committee of the General City Republican Committee, held a meeting for the purpose of taking the preliminary steps toward the inauguration of the Fall campaign in the City. A resolution was adopted, recommending the General Committee to call the Republican primary meetings at an early day, to elect delegates to the approaching Conventions. It is the custom of the Republican Party, in this City, to call these primary meetings for each of the several Conventions separately, so that the delegates to be chosen may correctly represent the wishes of the party, but on this occasion it was decided that but one set of primary meetings should be held in the various districts, and that the delegates to be chosen at that meeting should act for all the Conventions hereafter to be held, including the State, City, and County Conventions, and the City Convention to be held preliminary to the December election.

This recommendation goes to the General Committee, which meets to-night, for final action. We call attention to it, as being a very unusual and suspicious movement, and for the purpose of warning the General Committee to examine into it closely, before giving it their approval. It certainly has too mysterious a look to be satisfactory to Republicans generally, and we more than suspect that it is intended to forestall the usual preliminary action of the Republican Party in this City, by putting the control into the hands of a set of politicians who can be used and manipulated by Tammany. The proposed plan is an unusual one, and cannot fail to create a general suspicion that all is not right. We ask the General Committee to pause before they accept the suggestion, and thereby subject themselves to an unpleasant suspicion.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Reformers and Anti-Reformers—Scott Party Nominations—District Candidates—Prospects of the Election.

From Our Own Correspondent.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Friday, Aug. 19, 1870.

The political contest between the Reformers or Carpenter Party and the Anti-Reformers or Scott Party is getting warm. The Reform candidates have taken the stump, and have been over about one-third of the State. They have challenged their opponents to meet them on the stump in an equal contest, but the Scott Party decline this challenge. The latter are willing to send speakers to meet the Reform candidates, but the latter challenge SCOTT to meet CARPENTER—both candidates for Governor—and RANSIER (mulatto) to meet BUTLER—both candidates for Lieutenant-Governor. This failure of the Scott candidates to meet the Reformers is regarded as a point gained by the latter.

NOMINATIONS OF THE SCOTT PARTY.

The Scott party has just completed its set of nominees for Representatives in Congress in the four Congressional districts. In the First District, WHITTEMORE held out himself as an aspirant for the nomination until a day or two before the District Convention met, when he wrote a letter of withdrawal, stating that he did so in deference to the opinions of his friends, who had doubts as to his being admitted (although he professed to have none himself,) even should he get the nomination and also the election. The fact is, WHITTEMORE saw that his case was hopeless. The country at large had decided against him, and the tone of the Northern Press had left him no doubt as to what was the opinion of all honest Republicans about him and his delinquencies. The District Convention accordingly made its nomination without regard to WHITTEMORE, Mr. J. H. RAINEY (mulatto) being the nominee for that district. He is county Senator in the State Legislature. This promises to be the last of WHITTEMORE. In the Second District there was a split in the District Convention, and one branch nominated Mr. ROBERT C. DE LARGE, (mulatto,) who is now member of the House in the State Legislature, while the other branch nominated Mr. CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS BOWEN, at present in Congress. Both these candidates belong to the SCOTT party; but DE LARGE proposes to run in on the negro influence, and BOWEN trusts to his patronage already established. Gentlemen from Charleston, who know the parties, have told me that they expect BOWEN to secure the election. In the Third District the aspirants for the nomination were Representative SOLOMON LAFAYETTE HODGE and Gen. R. B. ELLIOTT, (a negro.) ELLIOTT was the preference of the opposite party, and secured in the Scott Party the almost unanimous nomination. Unless a strong opposition be nominated by the Reformers, he will stand a fair chance of getting the election, although in the last contest (1868) the SCOTT party were in a minority of 3,000. In the Fourth District there was, as in the Second, a split in the Convention. One faction nominated Col. A. S. WALLACE, the incumbent; while the other nominated a Mr. PUFFER—a Northern man connected with the Revenue Department. WALLACE is a native. In this Fourth District, where there are now two SCOTT candidates, the reformers have nominated Col. I. J. MCKISSICK—a Southern man whose disabilities have been removed.

PROSPECTS OF THE REFORMERS.

Now, should the Reformers make the very best nominations possible, it seems likely that they will carry, as they did before, two out of the four districts—the Third and the Fourth. In the First RAINEY (mulatto) will certainly be elected; and in the Second, probably, BOWEN again, although the friends of DE LARGE (mulatto) are quite sanguine. If these surmises be correct, the next representative delegation will consist of two SCOTT men—RAINEY (mulatto) and BOWEN, and of two reformers, both white—MCKISSICK, from the Fourth, and a man yet to be nominated from the Third. There is some talk of the Reformers uniting with the Scott Party on Col. ELLIOTT, (negro,) but this is not at all likely.

MASSACHUSETTS.

The Women's Rights Women to Canvass the State for Wendell Phillips—Contest in the First Congressional District.

From the Springfield Republican, Aug. 24.

The nomination of Mr. PHILLIPS for Governor has brought into the field a candidate who, if he consents to stand, is more formidable than any third-party man has been for years in Massachusetts. It is understood that Mr. PHILLIPS will receive the nomination of the labor party, and that he will be supported, to a considerable extent, by the friends of woman suffrage, of which he has long been the advocate. Indeed, propositions have been made looking toward a canvass of the State by Mrs. LIVERMORE, Mrs. HOWE and Mrs. LUCY STONE in behalf of Mr. PHILLIPS, and the Woman's Journal has been urged to declare itself in favor of his election on the woman suffrage platform, of which Mr. TRASK, the candidate for Lieutenant-Governor on the prohibition ticket, is also a warm supporter. It has been assumed, rather hastily, that men elected to the Legislature on the Phillips ticket would be likely to take part in the Senatorial election in favor of Gen. BUTLER, or, at any rate, against Senator WILSON. In regard to this, two observations are to be made. In the first place, Gen. BUTLER has indicated no wish to be a candidate for the United States Senate, and within the last six months has expressly withdrawn his well-known offer to contest Senator WILSON'S re-election. And secondly, even if he were a candidate, there is no special reason why the third-party men should support him in preference to WILSON or BOUTWELL, should the latter decide to stand for the position.

In the Congressional elections there is no expectation of any change except in one or both of the Boston districts, where it is possible that the Republicans and Democrats may be so nearly balanced that the third party can practically give the election to which it chooses. This would seem to involve the necessity of nominating with great caution on both sides; but, since neither the prohibitory nor the labor vote is likely to be large in Boston, we do not expect to see the result in the two doubtful districts at all influenced by the acceptance or declination of Mr. PHILLIPS.

It is well understood that if there were any chance for his election as Governor, Mr. PHILLIPS would positively decline to be a candidate at all. As it is, he may feel bound to allow the use of his name in the formation of a prohibition party, such as he has for years advised the temperance men to form. Should he come to this conclusion, the Republicans need have no fear that they will not re-elect Gov. CLAFLIN. The vote will be much larger than last year, on account of the Congressional elections, which will call out a full vote in all the closer districts, but the Democratic vote is not likely to gain proportionately so much as the Republican. It is probable that Mr. ADAMS will again ornament the Democratic ticket, though Mr. SWEETSER and Dr. SHURTLEFF are spoken of also as possibilities. With Mr. PHILLIPS in the field, the campaign will be a lively one, but the result would be substantially the same as usual, unless things change very much between now and November.

From the Boston Advertiser, Aug. 24.

The First Congressional District, Mr. BUFFINTON'S, appears to be the only one in this State where there is a chance of a contest. Mr. BUFFINTON'S supporters have the leading newspapers of the district on their side, and so far as it appears, the great majority of the voters. But the vigor with which they write about it indicates a movement against him of which they have some fear. Mr. DAVIS, of Plymouth, who was Mr. BUFFINTON'S competitor at the last election, has many friends in that district and in the State, who would be glad to see him in Congress. But Mr. BUFFINTON'S friends claim a renomination, on the ground of custom,—a claim certainly strengthened by his record as a most industrious and useful Representative.

COLORED LABOR CONVENTION.

Organization of the Body—Address by the President—First Day's Proceedings.

SARATOGA, N. Y., Aug. 24.—The New-York State Colored Labor Convention met at noon today, and was temporarily organized by calling WM. RICH, of Troy, to the chair, and then took a recess till 4 o'clock. Reassembling, Rev. HENRY HIGHLAND GARNET moved that all who were friendly to the cause, without distinction as to race or color, be allowed to take part in the proceedings, which was carried. The Convention was permanently organized as follows: President, Rev. WM. F. BUTLER, of New-York; Vice-Presidents, Rev. C. B. BROWN, Troy; L. H. JACKSON, Albany; Rev. J. C. GILBERT, Saratoga; Secretaries, E. W. CROSBY, Jr., Albany; E. O. C. EATO and S. J. STOKELY, New-York. The President, on taking the chair, made a short address, complimentary to the temporary Chairman, who had grown gray in his labors for the welfare of his race; on the auspicious condition of affairs; also on the people of his race, remarking that they are no longer mere hewers of wood and drawers of water. He referred to the objects of the Convention, to secure the opening of new fields of labor for the colored people, and said many good mechanics were working in the saloons of New-York because they were excluded from working at their trades. At the conclusion of his address, the Committees on Organization, Education, Finance, Constitution, Homesteads, Public Lands and Bible Statistics were ordered to report. The Convention adjourned till evening.

THE EVENING SESSION.

At the evening session the Committees were announced as follows: Finances—J. C. Gilbert, C. P. Dun, Saratoga; Wm. Deck, Newburg. On Address and Resolutions—J. Mathews, Albany; Henry H. Garnet, New-York; J. R. Wood, B. Jerome Jeffrey, Saratoga; Dr. J. Thompson, Newburg; J. J. Spelman, State Senator from Mississippi. On Constitution and Organization—C. W. Johnson, Albany; C. B. Brown, Troy; S. J. Stokes, New-York; E. N. N. Crosby, Albany. On Public Lands and Homesteads—Wm. Rich, Troy; Leon Turner, New-York; Jacob Thomas, Newburg; John Cutler, Albany; C. H. Decumbas, New York. On Vital Statistics and Labor—Dr. D. K. McDonough, J. J. Thompson, New-York; J. S. Smones, L. H. Jackson, Albany; Jacob Stewart, New-York. On Female Labor and Education, H. H. Garnet, New-York; Miss Saides Williams, Yonkers; J. C. Mathews, Miss Mathews, Albany; Maria Yuille. A written report from the last Committee was read by the Chairman. Rev. H. H. GARNET, in answer to calls, made an address on the present condition of the colored man. He said they had come to their rights and they would exercise them, particularly on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday in November. Regarding the Bible question in the schools, he said the colored men were solid for retention. He appealed to his friends not to vote with the party who tried to recall the ratification of the Fifteenth Amendment. The colored man who would vote with that party should be expelled from all society of the race. Rev. Mr. SEARS, of New-Jersey, thought the time had come when they could have their rights, and advised against all intemperance and all hurtful practices.

LOCAL POLITICS.

Fifteenth Assembly District Union Republican Association—The Difficulties in the District.

A meeting of the members of the Fifteenth Assembly District Union Republican Association was held last evening at the Assembly Rooms, No. 246 West Thirty-third-street, the President, Mr. HENRY D. LAPAUGH, in the chair.

After the disposal of some routine business, the Chairman called attention to the present aspect of the dispute between this Association and that by which Mr. E. HARRISON REED was elected as delegate to the Saratoga Convention of the 4th inst., and the result of the conference at Saratoga. He explained that when, in December last, it was agreed between the different organizations of the district that there should be an enrollment with a view to form an entirely new association in each Assembly District, there was a dispute as to the proper Presidents elected as delegates to the General Committee, one party headed by himself and the other by Mr. REED. Both claimed to be President, but it was apparent at that time that the only association that should properly be recognized in the district was the one over which he presides. There were several affidavits in existence, clearly showing that Mr. REED'S election was produced by fraud, and when, at the Saratoga Convention, he and Mr. REED presented themselves as delegates of the Association, and he (the Chairman) offered those affidavits and made application for an investigation into the justice of Mr. REED'S claim, they decided not to entertain the matter, as they had no authority to render a decision. When the application for an investigation was made, Mr. REED strongly opposed it, and to avoid an exposure offered to compromise, which he strongly rejected. He detailed the manner in which Mr. Reed procured the nomination, excluding from the meeting all but his own immediate supporters, and convening it an hour earlier than the time stated in the advertisement. With these facts in view a compromise would be discreditable, and he withdrew, for no compromise would satisfy him but the resignation by Mr. REED of the office he held in the Association. [Applause.] The speaker concluded by suggesting that effort be made to preserve unity in the Republican Party during the ensuing campaign.

On the motion of Mr. TURNER, a resolution was unanimously adopted approving of the conduct of the Chairman in the matter.

After some remarks from Dr. WILDER on Republicanism generally, the meeting terminated.

GENERAL NOTES.

SYLVESTER MOWRY is stumping Arizona Territory against MCCORMACK.

A Republican Union Convention of the Third District of Vermont will be held, today, to place in nomination a candidate for Congress.

The irrepressible WHITTEMORE is reported to be after the post of United States Senator from South Carolina.

Ex-Senator JOSEPH LANE and J. W. NESMITH are quarreling for the election to the United States Senate from Oregon.

Gov. WARMOTH, of Louisiana, denies the assertion that he is laboring to be elected to the United States Senate.

Mr. DONNELLY is looking for some sort of a nomination in Minnesota. The Chicago Post says he is not particular.

Hon. E. W. FARLEY, of Newcastle, has received the Democratic nomination in the Third Congressional District of Maine.

S. B. AXTELL, present Congressman from the First District of California, is spoken of as the probable candidate for Governor on the Democratic ticket.

A Delegate Convention of Republicans will be held at Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory, today, to nominate a candidate for Congress. United States Marshal HOWE and Associate Judge HOWE are eager to secure the honor.

W. C. FLAGG and A. W. METCALF have withdrawn from the Congressional canvass in the Twelfth Illinois District. Hon. E. M. WEST, of Edwardsville, will probably be the candidate of the Democracy in the same district.

The Cincinnati Gazette says that WENDELL PHILLIPS is a good deal more of a rhetorician than he is of a philosopher. His antitheses are artfully enough constructed, but their construction is more upon the basis of sound than of signification.

A letter from Raleigh, N. C., says that the Conservatives contemplate proceedings, on the inauguration of the new Legislature, for the impeachment of Gov. HOLDEN. They state that they have abundant testimony to secure his removal from office by that means.

MARK H. DUNNELL is the Republican candidate for Congress in the First District of Minnesota.

The Baltimore, Md., American says: "Hon. J. GLANCY JONES, late of Pennsylvania, now living near Dover, in the State of Delaware, is understood to be a willing candidate for Senator, to succeed Hon. WILLARD SAULSBURY, whose term expires March 4, 1871—provided the Democrats carry the election this year."

The Philadelphia North American says that Gen. SCHENCK, though representing an Ohio district, is in a large manner a national man; for while he stands up for the interests of his constituents and of his State, his comprehensive mind takes in the wants and prosperity of the nation, and assumes the task of legislating intelligently for all.

The Rockville, Md., Sentinel states that the "Democratic Party is not bidding for the votes of the negroes. It proposes to adhere to its old-fashioned doctrine that this country is to be governed by white men. It can see no strength to the Republic in making a race just released from bondage an element of the governing power."

A Democratic County Convention is to be held today at the house of J. B. HOUCK, New-Salem, N. Y., for the purpose of arranging a new basis of representation for future county conventions. This course has been made necessary through the increase of the number of wards at Albany, and the incorporation of the City of Cohoes.

Judge GEORGE B. LAKE has been nominated for Governor by the Working Men's State Convention of Nebraska. Judge LAKE has been heretofore a strong Republican. He announces an intention to accept the Congressional nomination. It is generally believed that the Democratic Party will make no nominations, but will favor the nominees of the Working Men's ticket.

Among the candidates for Congress in Kansas are Hon. SIDNEY CLARKE, of Lawrence; Judge LOWE, of Fort Scott; Col. JOHN RITCHIE, of Topeka, and Hon. T. H. WALKER, of Topeka. At present, Mr. CLARKE'S chances are regarded as most favorable, although he has some very able and worthy opponents. Lively times are expected until the 15th of next month, when the Convention meets.

At a regular meeting of the Ohio Republican Association of Washington, recently held, the subject of raising money for campaign purposes was brought up, and resolutions were adopted declaring the willingness of the Association to aid the Republican Executive Committee of the State of Ohio in the collection of such a fund. Messrs. W. C. PENNYWITT, D. C. COX and M. C. BAXTER were appointed to communicate with the State Committee, and to do all other things necessary to carry the resolutions into effect.

The Republican and Democratic Parties of Maryland are actively preparing for the Congressional contest in November. District and county meetings are being held for the selection of delegates to the Nominating Conventions. The Republican District Conventions meet on the first of September—that for the First District at Cambridge, the Second District in Baltimore City, Third District in Baltimore City, Fourth District at Frederick, and Fifth District at Bladensburg. The Democratic Conventions meet at Cambridge for the First District, Towsontown for the Second, Baltimore for the Third, Frederick for the Fourth and Ellicott City for the Fifth.

The Philadelphia Press says Democracy, as the term is used and understood, politically speaking, in this country, is proverbially cowardly. The whole party and its journals, at the outset of the present struggle, ranged themselves on the side of NAPOLEON. Times have changed since, however, and the chances of French success are greatly diminished. The majority of its newspapers have managed to change their front, and are now as enthusiastically Prussian as they were a few days ago Napoleonic. A few still adhere to NAPOLEON, just as they do to "the Constitution as it was" and a "white man's government."

"A Western paper, but poorly informed in regard to Massachusetts affairs and Massachusetts men," says the Springfield Republican, "confounds our Gov. TRASK with the Fitchburg TRASK; the anti-tobacco apostle, and speaks of the Prohibition candidate for Lieutenant-Governor as 'a man whose soul is thrown into convulsions if he is under the same roof with a glass of wine, and whose perpetual mental agony is indescribable because he cannot banish tobacco from the world.' This description does not fit at all. Gov. TRASK, though he goes in for prohibition as far as fluid beverages are concerned, is as fond of a 'weed' as any one we know of, and would be the last man to join a party proposing to prohibit tobacco."

The Death of James Watson Finlay at Halifax.

From the Scottish American of Today.

The news of the death of Mr. FINLAY by suicide at Halifax, on Sunday, has been received by us with profound regret. Mr. FINLAY was, believe, a native of Edinburgh, and on leaving school was employed in the office of a stock-broker in that city. Subsequently some of his literary efforts attracted the attention of Mr. RUSSELL of the Scotsman, who procured for him the editorship of the Berwick Advertiser. He afterward became editor of the Falkirk Herald, which paper he conducted with ability. Leaving Falkirk he returned to Edinburgh, and after several adventures in a minor capacity, became editor of the Guardian. He was subsequently connected with the Express some years previous to its amalgamation with the Caledonian Mercury. Prominent in the agitation for the repeal of the taxes on knowledge, he started an unstamped penny daily, called the Telegraph, in defiance of the then existing law. This proceeding caused some commotion, and during the resulting legal proceedings he gained considerable popularity, which, properly taken advantage of, might have redounded to his advantage pecuniarily; but somehow he missed the tide which leads on to fortune, and in 1857 emigrated to this country. Just previous to his arrival, a prospectus of what became the Scottish American Journal had been circulated, and Mr. FINLAY, becoming acquainted with its promoters, was appointed editor. He continued editor-in-chief of the Journal up to 1861, when ill-health compelled him to abandon the enterprise. He returned to Scotland, and after a time was appointed editor of the South Shields Gazette. In 1865 he returned to America, and settled in Quebec, afterward engaging in the fish business in New-Brunswick. This venture turned out an unprofitable one, and he abandoned it last Winter. He then became a contributor to the Canada Scotsman, published in Montreal, which, notwithstanding his able assistance, proved a commercial failure, and was discontinued. He was well posted on matters connected with the Dominion, and has been all along an occasional contributor to our own columns. Those who were personally acquainted with Mr. FINLAY will be surprised and grieved on learning the manner of his death, for he always seemed a man of singular fortitude and strength of mind in all the vicissitudes of life, meeting misfortunes with a firm front, and never repining over losses. He was a good and ready writer, and an acute and discerning critic. He was a genial companion, and admirable in conversation. He was, we think, about forty-five years of age, and leaves a widow and several children. Cerebral disorder, consequent upon sun-stroke, was undoubtedly the cause of his untimely end."

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE.

Meeting of the American Association at Troy—Election of Officers—Paper on National Wealth.

TROY, N. Y., Aug. 24.—The Association for the Advancement of Science, today, designated Indianapolis the place of holding the meeting next year. The following officers were elected: President, Prof. ASA GRAY, of Cambridge; Vice-President, Dr. GEORGE FARMER, of Yale; Secretary, F. W. PUTNAM, of Salem, Mass.; Treasurer, WILLIAM O. VAUX, of Philadelphia. The Association will adjourn this afternoon.

The following is an abstract of a paper read before the Association by CLINTON ROOSEVELT on the question, "Ought a true science of national wealth to be excluded from the curriculum of the American Association for the Advancement of Science?"

Mr. ROOSEVELT is willing to allow, according to the motion of Prof. AGASSIZ, made at the last annual meeting of the Association, at Salem, Mass., that the system of political economy, as taught in our colleges and universities, embracing only production, distribution, exchange and consumption of articles having exchangeable values, is insufficient to embrace a true science of national wealth. In his view the science of national wealth consists of three orders and nine genera, without counting the species, varieties, &c., as follows:

First—The creating arts and sciences, consisting of: 1. Agriculture; 2. Manufactures; 3. Commerce.

Second—The conserving arts and sciences, consisting of: 1. Law; 2. War; 3. Hygiene.

Third—The refining or perfecting arts and sciences: 1. Physics; 2. Metaphysics; 3. Politics.

These embrace "all that man can reasonably desire on earth as useful or delightful to him." All are founded on the wants of man, the original evil to be overcome being want, and the higher law being necessity in the original nature of things, the chief good to be pursued being happiness, and the rule of faith in evidence of truth being consistency. Truth consists in the nature of things, so that what is universally consistent is true whether we can prove any single proposition by itself alone or not. The reason why all systems of government by reason alone have failed hitherto to make peace on earth and good will to all, is that the will of man is not governed or to be governed by the greatest motives, but by the same general law that governs in physics; thus accepting the science of government as the science of motive powers. Motive powers are of two kinds, metaphysical and physical. And whereas, in physics motive powers operate directly as the substance, and inversely as the squares of the distances in space, in metaphysics motives govern the will of man in times. Thus men who verily believe in eternal rewards and punishments still give way to the present temptations, and fear little, practically, until death or the instrument of punishment comes near. Thus, as in the State of Wisconsin, the La Crosse and Milwaukee Railroad Company bribed all at once the Legislature, the Judiciary and the Executive, and left the people as so many sheep without a shepherd; so has it always been. A combination of moneyed corporations has never failed to carry their designs in any case unless opposed by a more wealthy combination. Nor is this rule peculiar to legislators, among whom some are superior to private gain, preferring honor and good conscience, for among all classes the immediate and direct self-interest is against the Commonwealth; so that, if men be let alone, things cannot regulate themselves, things having in themselves no idea of the kind. On the contrary, things let alone tend constantly to punish the indolent. The same things which, if let alone, are destructive to life and happiness, if removed, become beneficial in their proper places; as the offal of cities left to find its own level in the lowest places, sends forth malaria, disease and death, if transported to the surrounding country and covered in the soil produces flowers, fruits and cereals for the support of life and happiness; that there is a law of Providence under the higher law of absolute necessity in the nature of things; that what a man or nation will not labor or fight to gain and guard when gained, shall not be enjoyed. Hence, Mr. ROOSEVELT argues that the "gentle optimist" is in bad company when he cries, "let us alone" to buy cheap and sell dear, that things may regulate themselves; that the free-trader, free-lover and free-booter and slave-dealer utter the same cry, "let us alone." And this was all that the confederated States required, namely, to be let alone to buy cheap merchandise of old England and cheap negroes in Africa, rather than dear goods in New-England and to have free-trade in negroes. As to the rights of man, Mr. ROOSEVELT contends that as no man can have a right to do wrong, the rights of man depend, first, on his will to do right, and secondly, on his intelligence, because no man can have a right to wrong another by his ignorant presumption, which sets at naught all law, more than by any other selfish animal propensity, law being well defined by commentators as a rule of action prescribed by the superior, which the inferior is bound to obey. Any who oppose this principle advocate no law, and favor a return to anarchy. Men ought to be elected only to the lowest grades of office, and rise in the grades as in the army or navy, and learn thus the arts and sciences of government, as every other art and science is learned, by practice as well as theory, and when officers have been through all the grades they should retire to a court for the trial of impeachment and correction of all errors of administration. The parties aggrieved should complain to grand inquests, to consist of all the citizens in order successively between the ages of twenty-one and fifty-six, unless infirm or indifferent. The general principle of justice is that with what measure one metes to good citizens that should be measured unto him again. This principle should correct all false precedent.

Vessels Run Ashore.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Aug. 24.—The steamer Sunnyside, from Catskill for New-York, ran ashore, last night, between Cruger's Island and Goat Island, and now lies on the mud. No damage was done. The passengers are leaving the boat this morning to take a train on the Hudson River Railroad.

KEY WEST, Fla., Aug. 24.—The steamer Cachus ran on the French reef on the 20th, and was compelled to throw over 100 tons of coal. The brig Alexander, from Matanzas, for Wilmington, N. C., ran on the same reef on the 21st. Both vessels got off without assistance.

The Indians—Trouble With the Sioux in Montana.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24.—Gen. SULLY, Superintendent of Indian Affairs for Montana, writes to Commissioner PARKER concerning a recent attack on the Crow Indians by hostile Sioux, their strength being variously estimated by the Crows at from 800 to 2,000 warriors. The Crows are terribly frightened and demoralized. They state that they are out of ammunition, and that, together with their being so poorly armed, was the cause of their being driven in by the Sioux. Gen. SULLY thinks the Government will have constant trouble with these Sioux, and it will be impossible to settle the Crows on their reservation until the Sioux west of Black Hills and the Powder River country are severely punished.

The West India and Panama Cable.

To Messrs. Travers, Hunter and Morrissey, Executive Committee of the Saratoga Racing Association:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, owners of race-horses which have been run at the various meetings held over the Saratoga Race-course since the first organization of that Association, have seen, with astonishment and regret, in the New-York Sun, statements of a derogatory character made against the judges, starters and officers of the Saratoga Association. We being the parties most deeply interested in the proper and honorable management of the course, deem it our duty to deny the truth of the allegations made, both in the editorial columns of the issue of the 12th of August, and the report of the races in the issue of the 15th of August. We, without a dissenting voice, pronounce all the allegations made in the above newspaper utterly false and unfounded, and we request the officers of the Association to take the necessary steps to prevent the recurrence of a similar outrage in the future by withdrawing from the reporter of "the Sun" any access to the reporters' stand.

OBITUARY.

WILLIAM R. BRINCKERHOFF.

The death of WILLIAM R. BRINCKERHOFF, at the residence of Robert L. Pell, Esopus, Ulster County, N. Y., while on a brief visit, and after only a week's illness, has cast a gloom over many a heart.

Taken from active business life, where his honor was never questioned, faithful to all trusts, and a kind friend and adviser, he fell in the midst of his usefulness, leaving to those who knew him best a void not easily filled. One of the last of an old Knickerbocker race, a younger son of the late Abraham Brinckerhoff, Jr., of New-York City, familiar to us from early youth, he has passed, (God Almighty grant!) his earthly labors ended, to the rest of the life eternal.

LAKE MAHOPAC.

Grand Hop at the Gregory House—Brilliant Scenes and Costumes.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LAKE MAHOPAC, Saturday, Aug. 20, 1870.

Although Saratoga and Long Branch have long enjoyed a deserved reputation for fashionable gayety, the visitors to this beautiful spot, justly named the "Como" of America, enjoy quiet comfort with our pleasures. This beautiful lake, situated in the most romantic part of the hills of old Putnam, is located about 950 feet above the level of the sea, being about three miles in length, while the fine scenery and cool mountain air makes it one of the most attractive places of Summer resort in the State, if not in the country.

The principal hotel is kept by that excellent caterer, Dr. GREGORY, being handsomely and substantially built, capable of accommodating about eight hundred persons, and is situated on the easterly shore of the lake, having in front a large and well-shaded lawn, which is the popular resort of the guests during the day, as well as croquet players.

The lake is reached from Croton Falls over a mountainous but pleasant road, and being a five miles drive you can imagine the pleasure felt in going out from the depot. Upon arriving at the hotel you are met by the chief usher, old "PETER," a fixture here, and who is as well known in these parts as the legends of the Revolutionary War, of which the surrounding country abounds. At one look PETER can tell how long you intend to stay, and consequently your room becomes the object of his attention, and you are attended to accordingly.

Having said so much of the place we will have a few words to say of the amusements. Fishing, riding, croquet-playing and hunting form the principal occupation of permanent guests, and sight-seeing that of the transient ones. The fishing in the lake this season has been remarkably fine, as can be attested by Mr. RAYNOR and Dr. J. W. DOWLING, of your City, who have, by reason of their extraordinary skill in that respect, been styled the "Isaak Waltons" of Lake Mahopac.

On last Monday evening we were treated to one of the grandest exhibitions that was ever gotten up at any watering-place. It consisted of about two hundred boats, of all sizes, being brilliantly illuminated with Chinese lanterns of all colors and sizes, forming an illuminated flotilla, in two lines, and propelled on the lake. The scene was truly sublime and reflected great credit on our neighbors of Thompson's Hotel, who originated the idea.

Messrs. KETCHUM, COLE and CRANE, of our house are unceasing in their efforts to render us happy while under their supervision. The parlors nightly resound to the strains of delicious music from the excellent band attached to the hotel, while merry feet keep time in the mazy dance. For some time excitement has run high in anticipation of the annual ball, which took place at GREGORY'S last evening. The grounds attached to the house were brilliantly illuminated with Chinese lanterns, while calcium lights spread their brilliant rays over the surface of the lake, turning the night into day. The dining-room and parlors were used as ball-rooms, and were tastefully decorated with bunting, the music being furnished as BERNSTEIN can only furnish it.

The affair proved a decided success, and the display of feminine toilettes an interesting one. By the aid of a kind creature, well versed in such matters, I am enabled to give you the names of those who achieved successes in their costumes:

Mrs. Chris. Moller wore a blue silk, white tulle over-dress, festooned with elegant French flowers; hair pompadour powdered; had on very elegant diamonds. Mrs. Joseph Stiner, scarlet satin, round point lace over-dress, pearls and diamonds. Mrs. Charles Moller, rose-colored satin, point lace flowers. Mrs. T. B. Eldridge, blue silk, elegantly embroidered with white silk, pearls and diamonds. Mrs. Dr. Dowling, lavender silk, white tarlatan over-dress. Mrs. Fahnestock, elegant black satin, diamonds. Mrs. Truslow, lavender satin, thread lace shawl, diamonds. Mrs. Robert Cochran, blue silk, tarlatan over-dress, elegant pearl jewelry. Mrs. Bert, light-blue silk; very neat. The Misses Murphy, rose-colored and white silks. Miss Aulliffe, white suisse. Miss Clapp, white tarlatan, black lace trimmings. Mrs. Clapp, a dignified-looking lady, wore gray satin, point-lace shawl, diamond head-dress. Mrs. McKinney, blue silk, point lace, over-dress. Mrs. Raynor and daughter, white dresses, red and blue trimmings, diamonds. Miss Fayes, green-and-blue silk; very elegant and neat. Misses Button, white silk, scarlet trimmings. Mrs. William J. McGrath, rich black silk, point lace shawl, diamond ornaments; Miss Cora Hatch, a sweet little girl, light blue dress, pearl and diamond ornaments; Mrs. Hill, light blue dress, diamond ornaments; Miss Yard, her sister, white dress, with pearls and diamonds; Miss Angie Smith, pink silk; Miss Gayen, white Swiss, light trimming; Mrs. Col. Feyre and daughters wore light dresses, elegantly trimmed; Mrs. Chas. Ford, black silk, orange blossoms, a blooming bride; Mrs. Brun, black silk dress; Miss Dow, elegant white dress. Among the gentlemen present may be mentioned Mr. Rufus Hatch, the banker, Mr. Fahnestock, Mr. McKinney, of Boston, Messrs. J. Hoyt, Chris. Moller, Joseph Stiner, Chas. Moller, Lasqui Cochrane, Robert Cochrane, his tall brother the "Rowbat," Messrs. J. A. McGrath, John Murphy, Lee Ferris, Hill, Yard, Abel Lee, Stimson, Drs. Bailey and Linely, Clapp, Tillotson, Lord, Loyd, Button, Faye, Truslow, Col. Feyre, Peruvian Minister Begar, T. B. Eldridge, Truslow, Osborn, Renshaw and many others well known in New-York society. The arrangements were carried out in splendid style, and reflect great credit on the gentlemen having charge of the affair. Today we have a matinee concert, of which I will send you full particulars at a future time. WILL.

A Melancholy Case—Four Children Taken in One Day—The Mother Becomes a Maniac.

The Mount Pleasant (W. Va.) Journal learns, from a reliable source, the particulars of the following horrible affair, which occurred in Roane County a few days since. A lady, whose name our informant had forgotten, resides upon the above-named creek, and while doing "the week's washing," took with her the youngest child, an infant of a year old, leaving her other three at the house. While thus engaged at her work she heard suppressed screams at the house. Taking her little girl from the soiled clothes upon which it was sitting, she placed it in an empty wash-tub to keep it from crawling into the creek during her absence, and hastened to the house, where she met her eldest child with its head frightfully disfigured and swollen. She hastily gleaned from this one that the three children had crawled under the house in search of eggs; that while under something had hurt them, and that the two other children were still under the house. The mother, upon looking under the house, found them dead, with several moccasin snakes (a very poisonous and deadly species) crawling around their bodies. The neighbors were aroused, and by their assistance the snakes were killed and the unfortunate children taken out, their bodies presenting a frightful and sickening appearance. By this time the elder one was a corpse. The mother, in her despair and agony, had forgotten until now her little one at the creek, and upon going to the spot, found it also a corpse in the creek. It is supposed the little child climbed up in the tub, and was holding on the lower edge of it, when the tub upset, rolling the child into the water and drowning it. It is said the mother's grief was so great that at last accounts she was a raving maniac.

Shocking Murder in Iowa—A Doctor Allured to his Drug Store and Assassinated—Attempt to Cover up the Deed.

The Nodaway, Mo., Democrat has the following: Mr. J. J. BOUNDS, Sheriff of Page County, Iowa, stopped in our town, on Friday last, on his way in pursuit of a person whose name we did not learn, who is supposed to be guilty of the murder of Dr. I. K. WALKER, a highly respectable citizen of Adams County, Iowa. It appears that the scoundrel above mentioned has been seen frequently on the road from Adams County, Iowa, to Marysville within the last year. He is the same party who is suspected of stealing a horse near Savannah, last January, and who stole a mule from a livery stable in St. Joseph last winter, and swapped it off near Savannah. On the evening of the 18th inst. he came to Quincy, Adams County, Iowa, and inquired for Dr. WALKER, who was a druggist and practicing physician of that place, and stated that he wanted some medicine for a sick horse. Dr. WALKER was at home at the time, about 11 o'clock at night, but at the request of the above-named party he went to his drug-store to get the medicine. In about half an hour afterward an alarm of fire was raised, the citizens were aroused, and it was discovered that Dr. WALKER'S drug-store was in flames. The fire as yet had not made great progress, and the door was burst open and parties rushed in. The room was filled with smoke. Groans proceeding from the back room aroused suspicions of foul play, and some of the crowd rushed back, despite the smoke, and there a ghastly sight presented itself to their view. Dr. WALKER, covered with blood, with a terrible gash on either side of his head, was discovered lying among some barrels. Life was not yet extinct. He was immediately taken to his residence and medical aid procured, but up to the evening of the 11th inst. he remained speechless, and no hopes were entertained of his recovery. Dr. WALKER was known to have had $600 about his person at the time he visited his drug-store, as above mentioned. This had disappeared, and there remains no doubt that the villain allured him out on the pretext of procuring the medicine, for the purpose of seeking an opportunity to commit the diabolical deed we have described, and then to cover up the foot-prints of his crime, fired the building.

The drug-store was entirely consumed. It is hoped the wretch will not elude that just retribution which is due his crimes, and that the vengeance of the law will be but temporarily baffled by his efforts to escape.

THE FIRE FIEND IN CANADA.

An Area of Seven Miles Swept Over by Flames—Fearful Destruction of Property and Loss of Life.

From the Toronto Globe, Aug. 19.

There has been but little rain for twenty miles around this city for nearly two months, and the whole country is as dry as tinder. Great destruction of property has consequently taken place by fires. Last night a terrific gale of wind prevailed, and accounts, which are coming from all points, show that an immense amount of property has been destroyed, and several lives lost. I visited Bell's Corners today, which was burned down yesterday. Of twenty-six houses the only buildings now standing are a couple of churches. The dwellings, stores, Post-office, are all destroyed. The people lost everything, barely escaping with their clothes. Fully thirty farmers in the neighborhood have had their houses, farms and stock burned. Some of these farmers were very wealthy, like the ROBINSONS, GRAHAMS and BEARMANS. These people lose $8,000 or $10,000 apiece. Within a few miles of Bell's Corners, which is situated nine miles from Ottawa, the losses will foot up to $150,000. The village of Stittsville, about sixteen miles distant, was also burned down last night. Accounts today show that Mr. HASTEN and ROBERT GRANT, of Goulbourn, were burned to death; also Mr. RICHARDSON, of March. The destruction in the latter township has been great. In one place, for seven miles, all the houses and barns have been destroyed. Several farmers, about four miles from the city, in the township of Nepean, have also been burned out. On the north side of the Ottawa River, on the Gatineau, there was also great destruction. Last night the lumber in GILMOUR & CO.'S piling-ground, about 5,000,000 feet, was burned; also the frame houses occupied by the laborers, who lost everything. The lumber was insured for $40,000. The loss not covered by the insurance will be fully $25,000. The works at the Hull Iron Mines were also burned; half a dozen houses were consumed. The loss is probably $15,000.

West of the Hull Mountain, six or seven miles north of the city, a man named PINK is said to have been burned; also two women and three children, names not given. The destruction of property within twenty miles of this city is estimated at $700,000 or $800,000. The wind has gone down, so that present danger is over; but if the wind should rise the prospect is fearful to contemplate. This evening the fires in the woods are within a half mile of the village with 4,000 inhabitants on the opposite side of the Ottawa River. One hundred men with pails of water are checking the fire to-night. If a gale were to set in the town would hardly escape.

From the Montreal Witness, Aug. 18.

Early this morning a very serious conflagration occurred on the line of St. Joseph-street, about a quarter of a mile beyond the toll-gate, resulting in the destruction of some thirty tenement-dwellings and cottages, and rendering nearly 300 people houseless. The scene proper of the fire was in what is officially known as the village of Cote St. Augustin, lying between the St. Joseph suburbs and the Tanneries Village, and where there is no water-power or hydrants, nor could even a fire-engine be found to assist in extinguishing the flames, which raged so furiously, and threatened at one time the destruction of the entire village. Going west on the left-hand side of St. Joseph street, four streets run down parallel to each other, toward the canal. The first is the property of the Montreal Water Works, and is called the Reservoir Pipe Track; the second street runs down from MCKINNON'S bakery; the third is Rose Delima-street, and runs down from LUPIN'S corner tavern grocery; and the fourth is Bourgette-street, running down from CAMPEAU'S corner building. It was between these streets that the conflagration occurred. The fire first broke out shortly after midnight in the sheds and stores in rear of the tavern grocery of Mr. J. LUPIN, at the corner of Rose Delima and St. Joseph streets. It was not discovered until the flames were bursting through the shingled roof of the out-houses. A very strong breeze, almost a gale, was blowing at the time, and the flames spread quickly to the adjoining stable of Mr. HUGH BOYD, butcher. In a few minutes the fire extended to the dwellings at the corner, and before the inmates had time to remove their effects it had possession of the buildings, which, fanned by the wind, burned like a furnace. So sudden was the outburst of the fire, and so rapidly did the flames spread, that at first the people who lived in the vicinity were hardly awake when the roof of LUPIN'S house fell in and the adjoining dwellings on each side, in Rose Delima and St. Joseph streets, were also on fire. The people could do nothing. By 1 o'clock, the large brick house adjoining Mr. LUPIN'S, in which four families resided, also the large block of buildings belonging to Dr. BOUGINEMENT, on the western corner, occupied by five different families, were all in flames, likewise the range of buildings corner of Bourgette-street belonging to Mr. CAMPEAU, contractor, and occupied by Dr. HURTUBISE and three families. It was at this time that the fire alarm was sounded in the city, over which a bright red glare was cast from the reflection of the blaze on the sky. The fire, as viewed at this time from St. Joseph-street, presented a grand but terrible sight. A line of at least twenty buildings enveloped in white curling flames lit up the vicinity for miles around, while in the vacant field on the right side of St. Joseph-street were gathered in small groups the families whose dwellings were now lighting up the heavens. These unfortunate people had succeeded in saving a good deal of their household effects, which were lying about in indescribable confusion. The City Fire Brigade arrived; but for lack of hydrants they could not work with effect, and the strong north-west wind fanned the flames and drove them down Bourgette-street, where the wooden dwellings of Messrs. CHARLES LEE, PATRICK DELANEY, and three others, were soon reduced to ashes; also the dwellings in the next street, Rose Delima, of Mr. BARRY, Mr. ALLIARE, and the large dwelling and workshop of Mr. JOSEPH JARVIS, contractor, in whose yard was a large pile of lumber, which burned furiously, and for a time threatened destruction to the dwellings on the opposite side of the street. From this point the fire gradually moved east along the range of houses on St. Joseph street toward the Water-works' pipe-track, and among those buildings destroyed were the following: Tenement building belonging to Mr. LAURENT, occupied by himself and four families; the dwellings of Mr. PARKER, Mr. HAMELIN, and the large wooden house of Mr. ISADORE AMOS, butcher, with range of stables and out-houses behind; a horse which could not be got out here was suffocated and literally burned to a cinder. Next to Mr. AMOS' place, the three-story building occupied on ground flat as a tavern by A. PAUL, and upstairs by three families, was destroyed, with the tavern and bowling-alley of Mr. DUCLOS, also the small dwellings of Mr. BONNEAU, Mr. JAMES WALDEY and Mr. MCDIARMID, in rear of the biscuit factory. The two-story house of Mr. GUEST, on the pipe track street, was also gutted.

A man named PERRAULT, while endeavoring to save some effects from one of the burning dwellings, was knocked down and received serious injuries from the burning lumber which fell upon him. This is the only serious casualty to report in connection with the fire.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

The attendance, yesterday, at the Exchange, was again light, and appeared more so after the activity of Tuesday. No sales were made. The only business for the remainder of the week, worthy of notice, will be the sale of lots at Long Branch, on Saturday, by A. D. MELLICK, JR., & BROTHER. In this transaction already considerable interest is manifested, and there is every indication that it will be attended with success. Should any sales take place elsewhere, full details will be given from day to day.

Convertible Bonds.

This Road, connecting the important points of Louisville and Paducah, is 185 miles long and passes through a rich agricultural and mineral section of the State of Kentucky, the traffic of which, it is believed, will be abundantly remunerative.

Nearly the whole line is under contract, and thirty-one miles of the Road are already in successful operation.

The stock subscriptions (of which the City of Louisville subscribed $1,000,000) amount to $3,000,000.

To lay the rails and completely equip the road, THREE MILLION DOLLARS of First Mortgage Convertible Bonds have been authorized, bearing eight per cent. interest, payable semi-annually at the BANK OF AMERICA, in the City of New-York, on the 1st days of March and September.

These Bonds are the only lien upon the property and franchises of the Company, and are deposited with the UNITED STATES TRUST COMPANY OF NEW-YORK, which will pay over the proceeds of the bonds to the Railroad Company only in the ratio of construction.

The most rigid care has been exercised to protect the interest of the bondholders by every legal safeguard. The bonds can be converted into stock at the option of the holder for seven years after the completion of the road. The management is in the hands of some of the most responsible and favorably-known business men of Kentucky. With the guarantee of their able and faithful direction, and the large amount of stock subscribed, these bonds form a very safe and desirable investment.

The price of the bonds at present is 87½ and accrued interest.

CURRENT NOTES.

Prairie chickens and divorces are plenty in Indiana.

JOHN ROBERTS, an aged man, residing at Mount Washington, Mass., recently died from the bite of a rattlesnake.

The work on the Connecticut Western Railroad is progressing quite rapidly, and promises to be completed by the end of the year.

Fond du Lac County, Wis., will furnish to the country the small item of 800,000 pounds of cheese.

New-Albany, Ind., claims to have 118 public pumps in working order. Not bad for a small city.

The grocers of Jeffersonville, Ind., recently united as one man, to protect themselves from dishonest mechanics. When a new customer turns up at a store, under this arrangement, it will be known at once whether he is to be trusted.

The Phi-Ekonian, of Bath, Me., publishes a short sketch of school-boy life, from the pen of the Prince Imperial of France. It purports to have been written from Metz, and promises an early communication from Berlin.

The Petersburg (Va.) Courier suggests to Judge MANN, of that city, the propriety of inflicting a thousand or so lashes upon sneak thieves, instead of sending them to prison. It is not at all likely that Judge MANN will pay any attention to this advice.

ARTHUR L. BALDWIN, of Ashland, Mass., was recently sent to the East Cambridge gaol for eight months on conviction of having killed a horse by fast driving. Justice SHAVER, in passing sentence, referred, in severe terms, to the enormity of the offense, and regretted that the punishment could not be made greater.

The citizens of Courtlandt, N. Y., justify their conduct in having tarred and feathered a helpless woman on the grounds that she had been insulting and abusive to the wife of her paramour. On one occasion, it is said, she requested the wife to do some washing for her.

The body of a Prussian was recently discovered in the woods near St. Louis, Mo., with the head placed in such a way that it would seem as if he had been "standing" upon it at the time of his death. The Prussian victories had affected him so much that he went mad with joy, and wound up his existence in the manner described.

A man in Iowa who has suffered much from the industry of the gentlemen of the road, took the precaution recently, when filling out a check to pay his railroad bond tax, to make it payable to "highway robbers or bearer." It went to its destination all right.

Nashville, Tenn., is beginning to assume considerable importance among the cities of the South-west, through the manufacturing enterprise of its citizens. A cotton factory, with a subscribed capital of $300,000, is now in progress of completion. It is expected to give employment to upward of 2,000 operatives.

A man named JOHN EARLY is supposed to have been murdered on the track of the Connellsville (Penn.) Railroad, by three men against whom he had been a witness some three months since, on a charge of highway robbery. The deceased was found in an insensible condition, lying by the track, and died before consciousness returned.

The wife of EDWARD HUSBAND, a farmer of Venelle' Point, Ill., committed suicide a few days since by hanging herself from the limb of an apple-tree in front of her residence. On his return from market, the husband divided his sorrow between the death of his wife and the shaking down of several bushels of unripe fruit.

A German named STEDMAN, who resides near Philadelphia, and happens to have for a domestic partner a Frenchwoman of strong sympathies, quarreled with her, a few nights ago, over the war news. They were in the act of resorting to the use of a rusty sword and a bread-knife, when the noise attracted the attention of a Police officer, and he arrested the belligerents. It is not probable that they will live together again until France and Prussia are at peace.

Baltimore is at present excited over a domestic scandal which promises to culminate in an early application for a divorce by a much-abused husband, who, instead of taking the law into his own hands when the opportunity was presented, and shooting the author of his unhappiness, made a sensible speech, and withdrew to seek his remedy in the law Courts.

JOHN TRICKSTER, one of the gentry known as "mourning thieves," having observed crape on the door of a humble cottage in the suburbs of Philadelphia, waited upon the chief mourner, a widow named MORROW, and said that he had been sent to take charge of the corpse. She readily permitted him to look after the preliminaries, and handed him $11 50 for that purpose. TRICKSTER behaved true to his name, and did not return to fulfill the engagement. He was subsequently identified in prison, whither he had been taken on another charge.

The united ages of a family at Mineral Point, Wis., foots up 361 years. The eldest is seventy and the youngest fifty-six—all brothers and sisters. In the same house there are two boarders who, between them, represent 112 years. They are all unmarried, and it is said that they have never been known to quarrel with one another.

The system of clipping the tresses of the peasant girls, which is practiced in several European countries, was tried by an industrious individual named SOLOMONS, at Terre Haute, Ind., a few days ago, but in a very different way. Instead of offering to purchase the hair, he has been in the habit of decoying the innocents, treating them to ice cream and laudanum, and robbing them of their locks while in a semi-unconscious state. He was recently arrested, and held for trial.

The reporter of a Chicago exchange tells the story of a fashionable woman on Wabash-avenue, who, not satisfied with the nose that had been provided for her by nature, had induced a prominent dentist to manufacture a pretty one for her of India rubber. None of her friends know of the deception, but all admit that the air of the East during a recent trip has made her more beautiful than ever. How the reporter came to discover the matter, we are at a loss to comprehend, but suppose he nose all about it, or he wouldn't say so.

A case of peculiar interest to building societies came before one of the Courts at Baltimore a few days ago. The complainant, who is a member of a building society in that city, claims that a lot was purchased by said society, on his account, some months since, and that he had paid $200 of the purchase money. Subsequently he neglected to pay dues and fines for twelve weeks in succession, and the Association sought to sell the mortgage to make good the amount. The complainant now desired to stop the sale on the grounds that he was ready to pay all the arrears. An injunction was granted.

Mr. EBENEZER KNOWLTON, Principal of the Rincon Grammar School, of San Francisco, recently wrote to Dr. M. L. HOLBROOK, editor of the Herald of Health, requesting him to make arrangements with Pacer WESTON for a walk of 500 miles, from California to Oregon. In his letter to the doctor, he says: "If you can prevail on WESTON to come to California, I'll walk him 500 miles, over the Sierras, into Oregon, or Mexico. Goodspeed and Walkingshaw shall be referees, and will settle all disputes by reference to Walker's Dictionary. WESTON furnishes an example of how a man may get along by cultivating his understanding. It must have cost him great trials of sole to accomplish his last great feat (feet.) However, I trust that his injuries, if any, may soon be toe-tally healed." Mr. KNOWLTON, some years ago, was the champion gymnast at Amherst College.

The Pittsburg Fire—Destruction of the Pearl Flour Mill—Loss, $275,000.

From further particulars received of the burning of the Pearl Flour Mill at Pittsburg, Penn., we learn that the loss was much greater than reported by telegraph. The Pittsburg Chronicle, of the 22d inst., says:

"The loss, it is estimated, will reach $275,000, upon which there is an insurance of $90,000. The main building was erected about eighteen years ago, by a company composed of Mr. EATON, R. T. KENNEDY, JOHN T. LOGAN, the Messrs. CHILDS and others, and was operated under the firm-name of EATON, KENNEDY & Co. Its original cost was $60,000. Since that time additions have been made to the building, new machinery introduced, and all the improvements necessary for a first-class establishment provided. Since 1863 the firm of R. T. & W. S. KENNEDY, who became the purchasers, have operated the mill, and have succeeded in building up an immense trade, both East and West. The mill had a capacity of 1,000 barrels of flour per day, when running on the long term, and employed between twenty and thirty hands.

The insurance aggregated $90,000. Of this sum, between $20,000 and $40,000 is in Cincinnati companies. The remainder is in home and foreign companies, the names of which, as far as we have been able to learn, are as follows: Delaware Mutual, $5,000; Monongahela, $2,500; Allemania, $5,000; Pittsburg, $2,500; Cash, $5,000; Federal, $2,500; People's, $2,500; Enterprise, of Cincinnati, $2,500; Albany City, New-York, $2,500; Ætna, New-York, $2,500; Lancaster, $2,500; State, of Cleveland, $2,500.

WASHINGTON.

Annexation of San Domingo—Canal Survey — Counsel Returns — Currency and Bonds.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24.—Persons here claiming to represent the anti-Baez Party in San Domingo, are in receipt of various documents in opposition to the treaty of annexation, accompanied by information that CABRAL, LUPERON, DELMONTE, and others, are in the mountainous portion of the Republic, actively endeavoring to stir up popular sentiment against annexation. Whether these factionists expect a revival of the subject next Winter, or are only using it for political effect in San Domingo, does not appear.

CRAIGHILL, of the Engineer Bureau, to make the survey of the route for the James River and Kanawha Canal, for which an appropriation was made by the last Congress, and the party has just set out to begin the work, which will occupy about three months.

A UNITED STATES MARSHAL SHOT.

Information has been received at the Attorney-General's office, that H. J. SPRINGFIELD, the newly-appointed United States Marshal for the Northern District of Alabama, while on his way to Huntsville, to qualify, was fired at from the woods, and wounded so severely that it is feared his arm will have to be amputated. He has notified the Department of his desire to retain his office, and that he will qualify, and enter upon his duties, as soon as he is sufficiently recovered.

SCHEIDAM SCHNAPPS.

It has been decided, at the revenue bureau, that Scheidam Schnapps, bottled, and labeled as medicinal, must be stamped.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

POSTAL MATTERS.

The foreign mail service is being performed satisfactorily to the Department, notwithstanding the difficulties encountered in making contracts pending the war. The home contracts are being executed, and nearly all the routine work of putting them in operation under the recent letings is completed. The Postmaster-General hopes to make a considerable reduction of expenditures for carrying the mails. The opening of suspended routes in the South has been attended with less present and prospective costs than was anticipated.

MUTILATED CURRENCY.

Under the rules of the United States Treasury all mutilated bank notes are redeemed according to the degree of mutilation. A note with a certain portion of its superficial surface torn off is never redeemed at its full value, but in proportion to the quantity of superficial surface presented for redemption. Since greenbacks were introduced, the redemption division of the Treasury has been constantly engaged in redeeming this mutilated currency, and an account of the discount has been kept, which shows an aggregate, up to the present date, of $186,423, which the Government has thus saved, all of which has of course come out of the pockets of the holders.

DESTRUCTION OF BONDS.

The 120,000,000 of bonds destroyed, being canceled bonds purchased by Secretary BOUTWELL on account of the sinking fund and special funds, comprehended only such canceled bonds as had been purchased up to the date of the order for their destruction, which bears date about the 18th of July. Since the date referred to, two millions have been purchased on account of the July policy, and four millions for the current month, making a total of six millions which will probably be consigned to the flames at an early day. It is indicated that hereafter all bonds purchased on account of the sinking fund will be canceled and destroyed immediately after their purchase.

MISCELLANEOUS.

It has been decided at the Internal Revenue Office that where Scheidam Schnapps is put up in bottles and labeled as a medicinal article it is liable to stamp duty.....A certificate of authority was today issued from the office of the Controller of the Currency to the National Bank of Maysville, Ky., to commence business, on a capital of $600,000.....The Department has on hand quite a large amount of the buff, or yellow, paper, prepared originally for the first issue of postage currency. This paper Controller HULBURD will use for the preparation of notes for the gold banks. The same plate now employed in printing the national bank-notes will be used for the gold-notes. The only change in the wording thereof will be that where the words "National Currency" appear at the top of the present notes, the words "National Gold Note" will appear on the yellow paper notes, and the promise to pay will specify that the note is payable to the bearer in gold coin.

Smash-up on the Old Colony, Boston, Railroad—A Brakeman Killed.

From the Boston Herald, Aug. 24.

There was a serious and fatal accident on the Old Colony Railroad, at South Braintree, at 5 o'clock this morning, the particulars of which are as follows: The New-York and Boston steam-boat train, of which Mr. ASA FORBES is conductor, was nearing the depot at South Braintree, when the engineer, JOHN LUPKIN, made the discovery that the switch, which carries the engines on to the turn-table, was set out of place, not having been changed since an engine was turned late in the night. By this means the train, of course, was carried on to the table, as much so as possible, and a grand smash-up of the forward part of the train was the result. The train, which usually slackens at that point, was running at about twenty miles an hour, and immediately upon the discovery of the danger the signal for down brakes was given by the engineer, but there was not sufficient time to do much good. In coming to the pit of the turn-table the engine struck the abutment and made a clean jump of several feet, completely smashing, as it came, the forward trucks, drive-wheels and all the lower part of the machine. The tender and crate (baggage) and fruit cars followed suit, the three being a broken and shapeless wreck, piled into and upon the turn-table. The baggage-car was upset, and all the luggage of the passengers thrown promiscuously into a heap, many of the trunks and boxes being completely demolished. A brakeman named JOHN MARKS, living at No. 73 South-street, in this city, was on the platform of the baggage-car at the time the crate-car telescoped into it, and it is supposed was struck in the head by a part of the brake, by which his skull was fractured. He was found in the middle of the car, still holding the handle of the brake. He lived but a few moments, and must have been unconscious from the moment he was struck. He had set the "king brake," so called, and jumped to the street when he was struck. His body was brought to Boston on the train which arrived at 10 o'clock, when, by the direction of the railroad authorities, it was turned over to Undertaker COTTER, No. 295 Federal-street, by whom it was placed in a neat coffin and taken away. Although the wreck to the forward part of the train was most complete, none of the passengers were injured, and many of the passengers hardly knew the accident had happened or the danger to which they had been exposed until all was over. The engine was the King Philip, one of the best owned by the Company, and it will be a total loss. Mr. LUPKIN, the engineer, and the fireman named BRADY, remained at their posts, and were not injured, which is almost a miracle. Most of the passengers were brought through upon the next train, arriving in Boston about 7 o'clock. The baggage was extricated from the wreck as fast as could be, and sent on soon afterward.

The above is the first accident involving loss of life which has occurred upon the Old Colony Road for several years, and it is a singular fact that the same baggage-car upon which Mr. MARKS lost his life was the one upon which the last fatal accident occurred on the road, by which a man named BENNISCY ARNOLD was killed four or five years ago.

THE TURF.

The Middletown, Orange County, Trotting Meeting—Second Day's Proceedings—Tom Sayer, Henry, and Little Mare the Winners of the Purses.

The second day's trotting of the Orange County Pleasure Grounds Association, at Middletown, N. Y., yesterday, was witnessed by a large assemblage, nearly all the principal breeders and owners of fast trotting stock of that county, so famous for its unequaled breed of horses, being present. The day was unfavorable in the morning, but it cleared off during the afternoon, and everything passed off pleasantly. The management throughout the meeting has been unimpeachable, and the Association have manifested a sincere desire to secure the comfort of those who patronized the sport.

The first trot was for a sweepstakes for three-year olds, mile and repeat, in harness, which had seven entries, but only three started. These were GUY MILLER's b. f. Miller's Filly, by Iron Duke, dam Dejarnet; DAN SAYER's br. c. Tom Sayer, by Guy Miller, dam by Harry Clay; and J. H. BERTHOLF's s. c. Vernon, by Second Hambletonian, dam by Star. Tom Sayer was the favorite, at odds of two to one against the field, and he won, but after so close a contest with Miller's Filly, that the layers of odds trembled for their money in both heats. Vernon distanced in the first heat, which was won by Tom Sayer by a short length in 2:36¾. He won the second heat and race easily in 2:36, the filly breaking badly on the last quarter. After the race the winner was purchased by Messrs. JACKMAN and BONNER for $4,000, will doubtless prove a good investment, for he is a strong, well-shaped colt, with fine action and an undeniable turn of speed.

The second race was for a purse of $2,500, for horses that had never trotted better than 2:35. The entries were Henry, Hotspur and Western Girl. Henry sold for $100 to $25 against the field, but before the afternoon's trotting commenced BUDD DOBLE satisfied the judges that Hotspur was amiss, and would not start. He had been all right the day before, but DOBLE did not like him in the morning when driving him, and soon discovered that the horse had suddenly gone "off" in consequence of which he withdrew him. The fact of his withdrawal was not, through the neglect of one of the judges, communicated to the pool-seller on the track, and after the races were over, the judges, in order to protect the public, who had bought the field under the impression that Hotspur was in, declared all pools and bets on the race null and void. The race between Henry and Western Girl, in Hotspur's absence, was devoid of interest, the former winning easily in three straight heats. Time—2:34¾, 2:37, 2:38.

The third race was for a purse of $300, for horses that had never beaten 2:45. Four got off, three of them being entered to the post, the other, Nancy Fut, being drawn. The starters were Lady Irwin, Little Mare, Rice Greene and Lasher. Little Mare was the favorite against the field, and she won after a most interesting race of five heats; by sheer game ness she won the first and second heats; Rice Greene the third and fourth, (owing to the mare having cast a shoe, which nearly led to her being distanced,) and Little Mare the fifth. Time—2:44¾, 2:43, 2:44½, 2:45¾, 2:41¾.

Suicide of a Prominent Leather Merchant of Newark.

The business portion of Newark was thrown into quite a commotion yesterday noon, as the story spread that Mr. ALEXANDER M. OTTO, of the firm of JACOBUS & OTTO, had hung himself in the manufactory of the firm, No. 100 Market-street. Mr. OTTO attended to business as usual in the forenoon, and after selling a bill of leather, went upstairs about 11 o'clock. At noon his partner, Mr. JACOBUS, supposing that he was taking a nap, as was his custom, went up to dinner, and was shocked to find him dead. A small cord was tied about his neck, after having been fitted by a knot between two boards above, and the cord being too short for him to hang, he slid down on a pile of leather, and sat there till he was strangled to death, in which position he was found. Mr. OTTO was a very highly respected citizen, and a man worth $80,000. No reason is assigned for the rash act. His business relations were every way pleasing, and no pecuniary embarrassment could have caused the deed. The deceased was sixty years of age, and has always lived in Newark.

The Projected Port Jefferson Railroad.

One hundred thousand dollars has been subscribed toward the stock of Port Jefferson Branch Railroad, which is to run from Northport to that place. OLIVER CHARLICK, on behalf of the Long Island Railroad, has agreed to guarantee the payment of $100,000 of the bonds of the Company. It is believed by the friends of the enterprise that the road can be built for this amount. The only matter which delays the commencement of the work is the final completion of the lease to the Long Island Railroad. Mr. CHARLICK demands that the road shall guarantee $1 per mile for each and every mile a train is run, in which event, he says, he will run as many trains as they wish. The importance of this connection cannot be overestimated. All persons ship-building is that ring in Port Jefferson harbor, probably the only place in which this branch is prosperous in the country.

Highway Robbery in Harlem.

About ten days ago, as JAMES MCLAUGHLIN, residing in Harlem, was going home, late at night, he was assaulted and robbed of his gold watch by an unknown man, who made his escape. He went to the Twelfth Precinct and gave as close a description of the highwayman as he could under the circumstances. On Monday JOHN RHAN was arrested on a charge of petty assault, and the Captain, fancying that he bore a striking resemblance to the description which MCLAUGHLIN had given of the man who robbed him, sent for MCLAUGHLIN, when he recognized RHAN fully as the man. RHAN was, yesterday, committed without bail by Justice MCQUADE, in the Harlem Police Court.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

NEW-YORK.

Superintendent JOURDAN's illness assumed a more serious aspect, yesterday, and his friends became alarmed at his condition. Hundreds of them called at his house to inquire as to his state, state, and hoping to extend him their sympathy, but by direction of his physicians all were refused admission to his presence. It is not expected that he will be able to leave the City for the South on Saturday, as he had intended.

In consequence of the reduction of prices on the City railroads to five cents per head on and after October 1, the Dry Dock Company will not declare its usual dividend of eight per cent, this year. The Fourth-avenue road has not yet decided to reduce the price. Their charter, obtained in 1861, permits the Company to regulate their prices. The President of the First-avenue Road says he line don't pay at less than five and a half cents per head. The Third, Sixth and Eighth avenues, Dry Dock, Forty-second and Grand-street Ferry, are the lines which have paid dividends regularly. Occasionally a dividend has been paid by the Seventh-avenue line.

The different Tweed and Shandley Associations throughout the City are commencing for a vigorous political campaign during the coming Fall. A large meeting of the Edward J. The time for the meeting to be held will be settled at the next meeting of the Shandley Association.

As the matter of surface travel on that part of Fourth-avenue called Murray Hill, lying between Thirty-second-street and Forty-second-street, is settled in favor of City cars running northerly on the east side of the metropolis in centre of the avenue, and down on the West side, it is to be hoped that the holes made in the parks for lights, before the recent determination to run the cars on the avenue, will be closed, and the parks put in their original condition.

The audience was numerous, and the affair was one that reflected agreeably on the pastor and his congregation.

The boy KAVANAGH, only thirteen years of age, who murdered his companion, KELLY, one year older, is still at large. The Police should have no difficulty in arresting this youthful desperado. The Coroner seems to have an impression to the contrary, however, as he has issued a warrant for his apprehension.

The employes of FRANK LESLIE's printing and publishing establishment went on their annual picnic to Dudley's Grove yesterday. The steamer Virginia Seymour and the barges Walter Sands and Merchant conveyed the happy party to Dudley's, where they indulged in all the amusements incident to such occasions. Wallace's Band furnished the music, and gave those who desired to indulge in Terpsichorean delights ample opportunity to do so, both going, returning, and at the grove. The excursionists returned about 6 o'clock last evening, well pleased with their day's relaxation.

On Sussex-street he came upon the wife of Judge BEDLE, who, being unwell, was unable to resist him until Deputy Sheriff MCCOY, who was in pursuit, came up and arrested the man.

The hardware store of JAS. S. BEVERLEY & Co., corner of State and Greene streets, Trenton, was entered by burglars, on Tuesday night, and the money-drawer robbed of a small amount of cash. The safe of the establishment was not opened, neither were any goods taken from the store, which leads to the belief that the burglars were disturbed before finishing their work. Entrance was effected by forcing a window in the rear of the store.

Many friends of Bishop BAGLEY met him at his home in Newark, Tuesday night. The Young Men's Catholic Association, accompanied by the Germania Band, tendered him a serenade, to which he responded pleasantly. Many citizens followed the band, gathered about the house, and enjoyed the occasion.

A fire broke out, Tuesday night, on Sanford-street, South Orange, and destroyed a barn and granary, the property of Mr. DANIEL DEMAREST. Besides the hay and grain in the building, a valuable pair of horses were consumed. The fire was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary. The property was nearly covered by insurance, the loss being in the vicinity of $6,000.

JAMES WATSON, a little boy who lives with his parents in Bergen, was thrown down and run over by a horse and wagon on Tuesday afternoon, and had one arm and one leg broken. His injuries, it is feared, will prove fatal.
